Newspaper Opinions on New Pictures

"The Circus"—United Artists, Los Angeles

Times: "Chaplin hits peak in comedy. Triumphant laugh festival. One of his most triumphant achievements. A show for everybody. Glorious fun. Unalloyed comedy. One of his cleverest inventions for its comedy. Almost unrivalled in Chaplin repertoire. Typical Chaplin tricks that are all hilarious. Chaplin at his smartest. A study in rhythmical timing. High spot of all for laughs is the finish. For those who are seeking the nuances of the Chaplin art, is virtually worth the whole evening."

Record: "Charlie at best. There probably never was a circus or a clown any funnier than Chaplin is. Hearty abdominal laughter. Novel gags productive of hearty laughs than any of his other most recent films."

Examiner: "Irresistible mimicry of Chaplin and his fine art of pantomime has seldom, if ever, had such a medium. Brings out all Chaplinesque qualities that are so appealing, so devastatingly funny and so representative of the highest form of screen artistry. Brought forth roars of laughter. An example of what can be done with the right type of comedy. Intrigues the imagination and pleases the great majority."

Express: "It sent them away still laughing at crazy antics of Chaplin. Undeniably the funniest of Charlie's output in years. Just a stream of looney events in the realm of the sawdust gypsies and ingenious beyond Charlie's usual efforts. Gags ingenious and hilariously effective. Nowhere has there been a funnier thing."

Evening Herald: "Chaplin at best. Unforgettable pantomime and spontaneous comedy. Another arresting contribution to screen by its premier comedian. Presents Chaplin in his most contagious mood of comedy, and is further proof of his mastery of pathos. Enough gags for a dozen comedies. Pantomime receives a classic interpretation in more than one scene."

Illustrated News: "In a class by himself. Heavy laughter and applause."

"Wings"—Paramount, Biltmore Theatre, Los Angeles

Evening Herald: "Most thrilling motion picture scenes ever taken. I believe that war scenes in 'Wings' are greatest ever filmed. I guarantee it will give you greatest thrill you ever experienced in motion picture theatre."

Record: "A picture so big it can't be exaggerated. The mightiest picture ever made. Completely dwarfs its sister films of the war and as for the other 'best' pictures of recent years, they are nowhere. Even without its air scenes, 'Wings' would probably be best war picture made."

Examiner: "Gripping aviation drama. Cannot be judged by ordinary standards of criticism because of path it blazes in advanced photography and direction of unprecedented air scenes. Direction grand."

Daily News: "Easily best war picture ever filmed from standpoint of giving uninformed portrayal of combatic conditions during World War. To describe it adequately is impossible. Immensity of portrayal leaves spectator awed."

Times: "Spectacle of season! 'Wings' assumes that designation. Huge, imposing and at times well-nigh monumental. Large throng overwhelmed by magnificence of this air epic. Startling blending of almost bewildering effects, sounds and action for which there has so far been no equal. War is background, but though there has been war picture upon war picture, 'Wings' is bound by very character of aerial panorama to be reckoned essentially a novelty."

Evening Express: "Two hours of spellbinding by most original of all war pictures, 'Wings.' Devices that accompany film aid immeasurably in making excitingly graphic its depiction of warfare in air. Nothing approaching vividness has ever been done in pictures. One thrill after another and new experience in theatre."

"The Patent Leather Kid"—First National, Metropolitan Theatre, Washington, D. C.

Herald: Picture that we might call an epic in screen dramas. Magnificent climax found audience tense with emotion. Powerful story. Gives all phases of human emotion. Barthelmess has never done better work or had a greater part. See it by all means."

Post: "Story of many moving human qualities, rich in comedy and vibrant with dramatic power. Greeted by cheering crowds that seemed to presage eminently successful extended run. Barthelmess does tremendously capable piece of work. A magnificent achievement."

News: "Rated rather generally for a place in the 'Best Ten Pictures' of the year. Should be good for longer stay than announced booking. Well-told story with thrilling incident . . . . Barthelmess in role worthy of his talents. Splendid acting . . . .convincing."

Star: "Thrilling with echoes of late war."

Times: "Brings to screen another graphic and thrilling war picture. One of best of war films.

"Drums of Love"—United Artists, Liberty Theatre, New York City

Telegraph: "'It' dominates story. Red-hot love story. Sock 'em with sex. Bursting into spontaneous applause at utterly exalted beauty of several scenes. For sheer pictorial splendor I fail to recall anything excelling. Has pyramided suspense to terrific climax."

Mirror: "Griffith's best. Beautiful film. Held and enchanted by the sheer pictorial beauty of the action. Mary Philbin is exquisite. A good picture."

"The Dove"—United Artists Rialto Theatre, New York City

Brooklyn Daily Eagle: "Photodrama gorgeously mounted."

News: "It is a cinema of rare charm and much pictorial beauty."

Tribune: "Miss Talmadge looks charming and acts competently. The film has the virtues of being perfectly beautiful in its pictorial qualities, entirely modern in the interestingly direction and considerably better—oh, miles better—than the usual program picture. Also, it is quite faithful to its stage predecessor."

Graphic: "Provides good entertainment. Miss Talmadge is as beautiful as ever. She made a most appealing dancing girl, and attractive enough to have inspired some of the exciting episodes of 'The Dove.'"

"Four Sons"—Fox Films, Gaiety Theatre, New York City

Morning Telegraph: "Hats off to new star! Miss Mann gives new meaning to perennial inspiration of mother image. . . . Acceptance of fate that strums sad but beautiful melodies on heart strings."

American: "Picture comprised of all that goes toward making good screen entertainment . . . safe to predict it will long reside at Gaiety."

Morning World: "Splendid effort."

Times: "Graphic conception."

Graphic: "Is essentially box office picture."

Journal: "Great audiences will love it."

Telegram: "Mother picture with dignity at last, with pathos instead of bathos—excellently made—credit to all."

The VOICE of The SILENT Drama

IN those tense moments which give the thrill of life and action to a photo-play, reality of impression depends on two senses— the message to ears as well as eyes. Let the Kilgen Wonder Organ delight your patrons with its vivid story! For with the resources of a full band, and the richness of a symphonic orchestra, it combines special devices which faithfully reproduce every imaginable sound, and truly make the silent drama live! With it, indeed, are moving pictures; since what the screen shows, the Organ tells!

from the Kilgen Organ:

— the lion's roar
- the clicking camera
— the rifle's crack
the song of the jungle
the thunderstorm
the slashing rain
the steamer's siren
— rattling chains
the anchor's splash
— homeward bound
- the hurricane the calm; the rolling deep moonlight and music
- the busy harbor
home, sweet home.

these and a thousand sound-pictures true to life are daily told by the great Kilgen Theatre Organ.

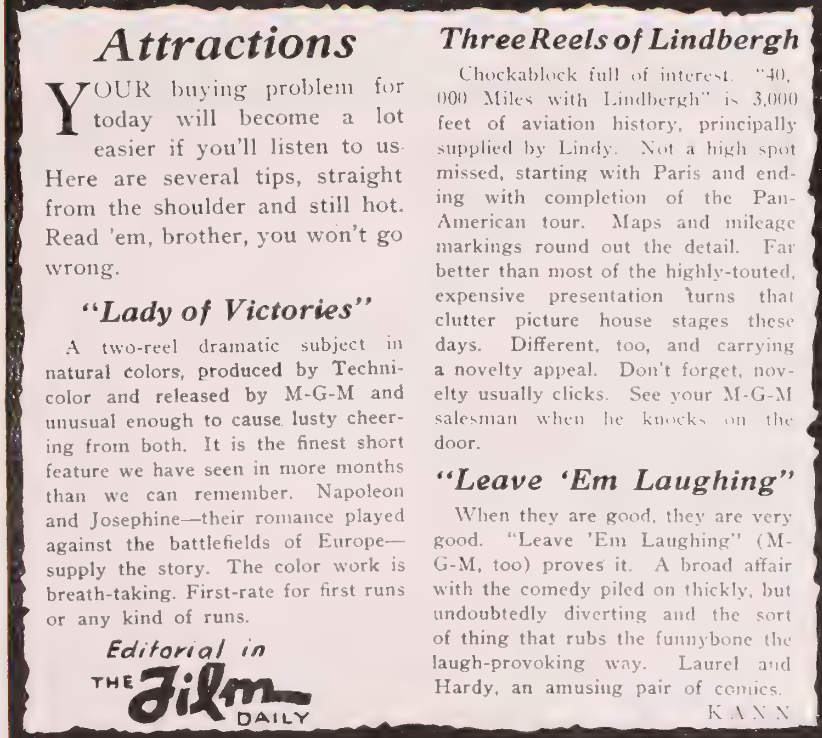
Reg. U. S. Patent Office

READ WHAT FILM DAILY SAYS ABOUT METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER SHORTS. ISN'T IT GREAT THE WAY M-G-M HAS SHOWN THE WHOLE INDUSTRY HOW SHORTS CAN BE MADE TO BRING REAL CASH TO THE BOX-OFFICE INSTEAD OF JUST FILLING TIME ON A PROGRAM. NO WONDER EXHIBITORS LOOK TO M-G-M FOR SHORTS NOW AND FOR THE FUTURE!



Attractions

YOUR buying problem for today will become a lot easier if you'll listen to us. Here are several tips, straight from the shoulder and still hot. Read 'em, brother, you won't go wrong.

"Lady of Victories"

A two-reel dramatic subject in natural colors, produced by Technicolor and released by M-G-M and unusual enough to cause lusty cheering from both. It is the finest short feature we have seen in more months than we can remember. Napoleon and Josephine—their romance played against the battlefields of Europe—supply the story. The color work is breath-taking. First-rate for first runs or any kind of runs.

Three Reels of Lindbergh

Chockablock full of interest. "40,000 Miles with Lindbergh" is 3,000 feet of aviation history, principally supplied by Lindy. Not a high spot missed, starting with Paris and ending with completion of the Pan-American tour. Maps and mileage markings round out the detail. Far better than most of the highly-touted, expensive presentation turns that clutter picture house stages these days. Different, too, and carrying a novelty appeal. Don't forget, novelty usually clicks. See your M-G-M salesman when he knocks on the door.

"Leave 'Em Laughing"

When they are good, they are very good. "Leave 'Em Laughing" (M-G-M, too) proves it. A broad affair with the comedy piled on thickly, but undoubtedly diverting and the sort of thing that rubs the funnybone the laugh-provoking way. Laurel and Hardy, an amusing pair of comics.

- Cools in summer time.

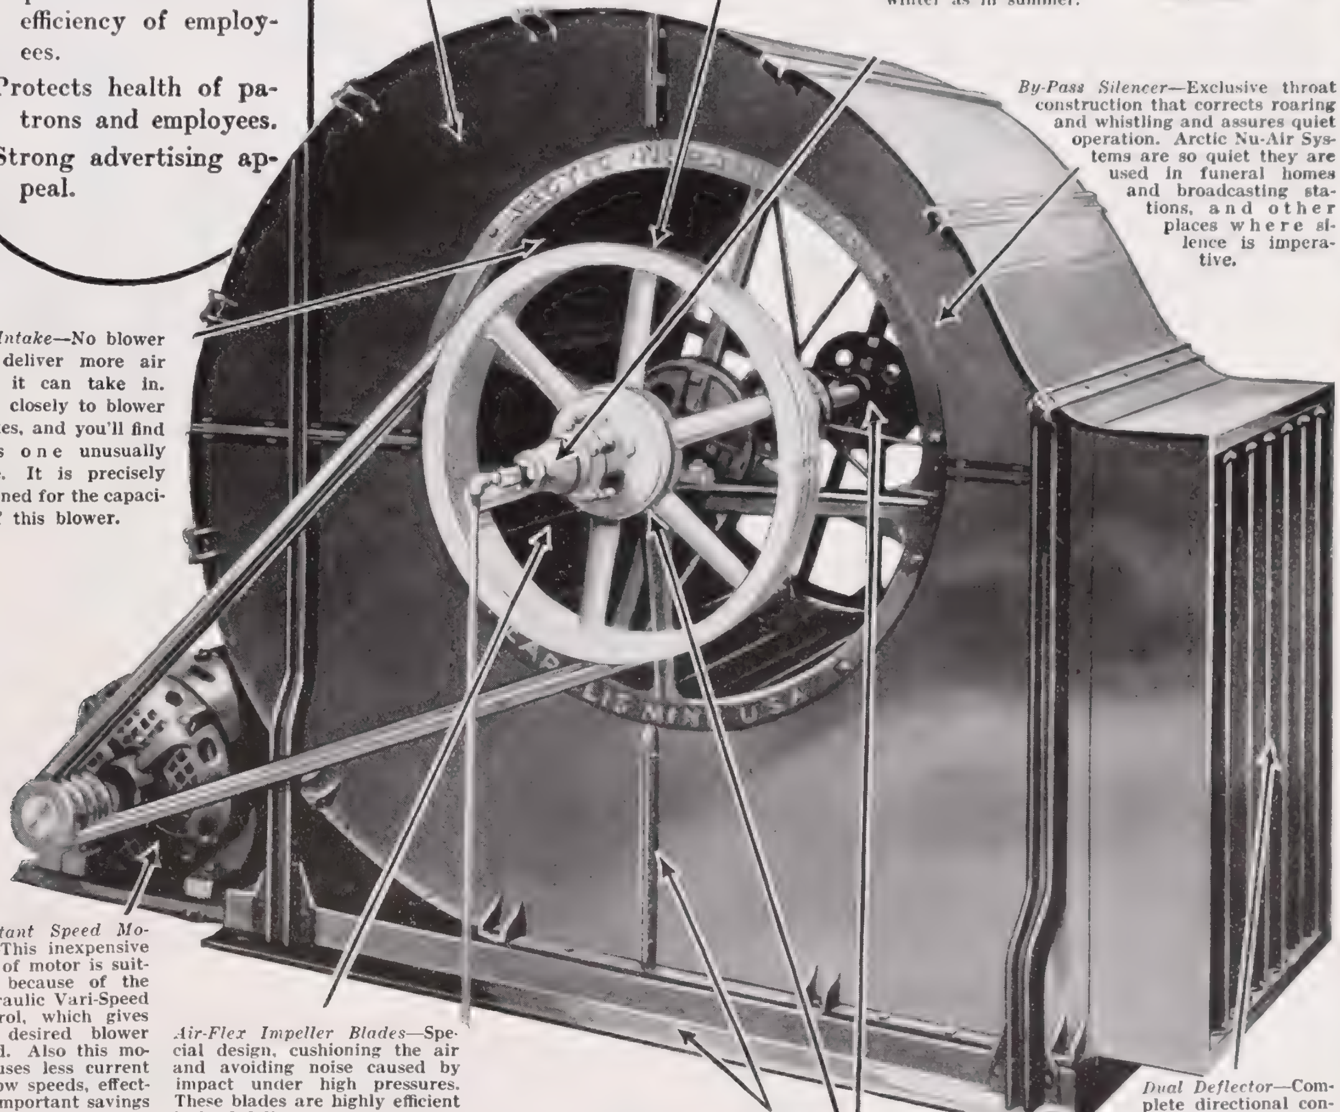
Steel Construction — All-metal construction makes this system rugged, rigid and silent. It reduces vibration. It assures longer service life. Scientific bracing and reinforcements add to the strength and rigidity of this construction.

Multi-Belt Drive—This triple-traction drive is quiet, positive and safe. Flexing of round belts gives positive expansion grips against pulley grooves. Belts are less susceptible to stretching and wear, and cannot run off the pulleys.

Vari-Speed Hydraulic Control—This plunger applies oil pressure which maintains a corresponding steady pressure against the friction discs at the pulley, and so positively controls the blower speed. With any variation of blower speed available the system becomes a year-around asset, valuable in winter as in summer.

Automatic Safety Shut Off The safety switch cam automatically releases oil pressure when current is turned off. Thus motor always starts with minimum load, avoiding excess strains on motor and belts.

By-Pass Silencer—Exclusive throat construction that corrects roaring and whistling and assures quiet operation. Arctic Nu-Air Systems are so quiet they are used in funeral homes and broadcasting stations, and other places where silence is imperative.



Big Intake—No blower can deliver more air than it can take in. Look closely to blower intakes, and you'll find this one unusually large. It is precisely designed for the capacity of this blower.

Constant Speed Motor—This inexpensive type of motor is suitable because of the Hydraulic Vari-Speed Control, which gives any desired blower speed. Also this motor uses less current on low speeds, effecting important savings in current consumption.

Air-Flex Impeller Blades—Special design, cushioning the air and avoiding noise caused by impact under high pressures. These blades are highly efficient in load delivery.

Reinforced Construction—Ample reinforcing where needed, adding to rigidity of blower and silence in operation.

Rubber-Lined, Shock-Cushioned Bearings—Hyatt-equipped, self-aligning, noiseless.

Dual Deflector—Complete directional control of air currents. Has beautiful grilled appearance, to harmonize with interior decorations.

The Trade Paper

It's Mighty Important as a Recent Event Shows

By William A. Johnston

WE come now to an important point that was brought out very clearly as a result of the Brookhart hearing.

We refer to the part played by the trade paper—the vital part—in questions affecting the industry, and its relations with the public.

At the Brookhart hearing, the industry was under the spotlight of Governmental and public opinion. More so than it has ever been before.

Two trade papers were quoted as authorities before the Senate Committee. One was Motion Picture News; the other, The Film Daily. If there were others, we have not seen them mentioned in reports of the sessions. We should be glad to include them, if we knew about them; and we will do so later, if it appears that they should be included.

But The News and The Film Daily were quoted. The editorial of January 21 in which we stated in unequivocal terms our opposition to the Brookhart Bill and our equally emphatic plea that the industry's ills be cured by those responsible for them, was read almost in its entirety into the record.

Letters from exhibitors, which came as a result of this and succeeding editorials and to which we gave prominent space for several weeks, were also put into the record.

Some of these letters opposed the bill; others favored it. All came from responsible sources and were printed by us as showing the state of public opinion inside the business on the vital matter with which the Brookhart Bill sought to deal.

Each of these letters we printed, whether they agreed with our views or not, and in full.

In doing this, we were plainly discharging our duty, and without recourse to propaganda for one side or the other. Our views we stated; the question was open for discussion and we gave fair play to both sides.

We go into such detail in this matter to establish two points:

First, the responsible trade paper plays a significant part in the industry's relations with the public. If that were not true, the two papers would not have been quoted by witnesses at Washington.

When you're talking to a Senate Committee at a Washington hearing you're talking, through newspapers and otherwise, to the American people.

The second point is this: the trade paper, as a leader in and interpreter of industry opinion, must, as a matter of duty, state its own views on important questions.

In this duty, it should be guided by its own honest judgment, paying no attention to axe-grinders. There are always a number of people, on both sides of questions, who want a publication to print only what they want printed.

Publications which consent to do this merely to "play safe" have no real policy of their own and no real influence.

Defense against outside enemies when the industry in its entirety is under attack, and is presenting a united front, has been carried through by the trade papers for years.

That service, honestly and freely and gladly given, is to a large degree responsible for the success of the business.

Yes, the trade paper is mighty important. The Brookhart hearing proves it—again.

Allocation of Territory Charged by Brookhart

Senator's Figures on Producer-Owned Theatres Challenged by Kent and Pettijohn

(Special Dispatch to Motion Picture News)

Washington, March 7.

A TABULATION purporting to show the number of theatres owned in each state by producers, the accuracy of which was challenged by C. C. Pettijohn, of the Hays organization, and S. R. Kent, general manager of Paramount, was filed for the record at the block-booking hearings by Senator Brookhart.

The figures showed, Senator Brookhart declared in submitting the table to the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee, that there had been allocation of territory by the producer-exhibitors, since in a state where one producer had a number of theatres the other producer would be represented by only a few houses or none at all.

His figures were questioned when he declared that Publix owned a large number of theatres in a Southern state, it being asserted by Mr. Kent that the houses referred to were Saenger houses.

The Senator also questioned whether there was not allocation of product on the same basis. The figures were the subject of desultory argument when Senator Brookhart started to read them off by states, and he consented to file them for the record without further debate.

The table filed by Brookhart follows:

Cohen Files Brief on Brookhart Bill

SYDNEY S. COHEN, as president of the Board of Trade and Commerce of the Motion Picture Industry of the United States of America, has addressed a communication to Hon. James E. Watson, chairman of the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate on the Brookhart Bill.

In part, the brief says:

"I find, through a referendum which I have taken up with our members of the Board of Trade and Commerce of the Motion Picture Industry of the United States of America, comprising theatre owners in every state in the union unaffiliated with film producing and distributing companies, that they favor by a large majority the passage of Senate Bill 1667, feeling as they do that a stronger force than any existing today should be invoked to better safeguard their investments and interests in the motion picture industry, and that this bill's sincere intent, if put into operation, will be an instrument which will alleviate their most pressing ills, and will permit them to better serve their public."

No Tax Changes Indicated in Ontario's Budget

The annual budget of the Ontario Government, brought down in the Provincial Legislature by Hon. J. D. Montieth, Provincial Treasurer, on March 1, refers to the abolishment of the amusement tax in Ontario during the past year on tickets valued at 25 cents and under. The budget does not announce any further reductions for the coming 12 months, however, despite the fact that a surplus of $359,000 has resulted from the past year's operations. This was the first surplus for Ontario since the war.

A few weeks ago Premier G. H. Ferguson of Ontario asserted that it had come to his attention that Ontario exhibitors had not passed on the amusement tax reduction to the people and that he contemplated replacing the tax on theatre tickets up to 25 cents, because the province might as well have the money as anybody else, he said.

But no change has been announced, either one way or the other, in the 1928 budget.

Amateur Theatres Crop Up in Northern Britain

Northern British exhibitors are finding cause for complaint in that several people in the district have opened up miniature or amateur theatres which, of course, operate, although occasionally, in competition with them, according to advices received at the Department of Commerce, Washington, D. C. Exhibitors are therefore somewhat exercised in their minds concerning measures it may be possible to adopt to prevent such experiments obtaining a hold on the public. This is an added menace to that of the home cinema shows which, according to reports, are growing in popularity in the north.

Defeat of Brookhart Bill Steffes' Forecast

DUE to lack of organization by exhibitors the Brookhart measure will be defeated is the forecast of W. A. Steffes, president of the exhibitors' unit of the Northwest. Mr. Steffes believes that 500 exhibitors should have been present at th hearings on the measure, and that a substantial defense fund should be on hand to enable "the selection of a committee of at least one member from every state in the Union to act as a lobby unit until Congress adjourns."

Plan Under Way to Weld Quebec Houses Together

A company has been established at Montreal, Quebec, for the purpose of organizing a chain of moving picture theatres in Quebec centers under a unique plan. The enterprise, the Consolidated Theatres Corp., has announced that it will not build any theatres but that it will acquire existing theatres in villages and in the outlying sections of the large cities.

The company does not propose to enter the downtown district of any city in the province. Several small theatres have already been taken over.

Legislature to Doom All Film Bills But One

The only motion picture bill to be introduced at the present session of the New York State Legislature in Albany, which stands a ghost of passage, is the Dick bill, relative to conferring additional powers of revocation on the head of the New York state motion picture censorship bureau. The bill has been reported out of committee and is slated to be passed. All other bills will go in the discard, according to the present outlook.

Four Motion Picture Firms Incorporate in New York

Motion picture companies incorporating in New York State during the past week includeed the following: Colbro Amusement Corporation, $5,000, Abe, Edith and Sol Coleman, New York City; R. S. Theatre Operating Company, Inc., $10,000, Dorothy Stepp, Bess Kaufman, Sylvia Leby, Brooklyn; Iris Theatre Corporation, Port Richmond, capitalization not stated, Bryan W. Budd, Joseph M. Kehoe, West New Brighton; John Duschemin, Staten Island.

Langdon Not Leaving Them Declares First National

Harry Langdon will remain at the First National studio in Burbank, contrary to rumors that he would produce his next picture at the Tec-Art or Metropolitan studios, asserts First National. He has not chosen a title for his new vehicle, nor chosen a director thus far. The story deals with a phase of the world war and details the adventure of a youth who, far away from civilization, was not aware of a war until he strays into a small community.

Inside Slants on the Industry

PICTURES AND PEOPLE

The Mirrors of Filmdom

"MOTHER MACHREE," which came to Broadway this week as the third of a group of Fox specials playing legitimate houses, has distinct box-office angles and obvious exploitation possibilities.

It is not in any sense a great picture, and it is filled with hokum, but box-office hokum of the sob variety, relieved by touches of humor, contributed chiefly through the splendid acting of Victor McLaglen. Belle Bennett gives a superb performance in the mother role.

The thing that really lifts it out of the run-of-the-mine type of films is Movietone, particularly the sequence in which Neil Hamilton, as the hero, appears to sing the song around which the story is written. Done in close-up, with Hamilton at the piano and the song apparently coming from him just as if he were there in person, this sequence is impressive to a degree.

Preceding the feature in the Globe Theatre program is a number of Movietone newsreel and magazine "shots." These score decisively, and serve as a reminder that "sound pictures" are, as we have so often maintained, destined to be the most important development in the industry's production future.

THE secrets of the studio should not be revealed to the public, declares R. Gordon Hudson, of the Alden Theatre, Safety Harbor, Florida, in a letter to us. He writes:

''Until some of the big boys get away from their hardwood desks and get into the provincial towns of America they will never realize the ignorance of the masses about pictures. I firmly believe that a lot of inside info. has been put out by the periodical movie magazines that really hurt the industry and a lot has been left unsaid that would help.

''An audience would not enjoy a stage play viewing it from the rear and seeing all the trick lights and devices that produce the effects. The same applies to revealing all the secrets of the studio in pictures taken behind the set showing the fake snow storm or the fake rain. To live and enjoy the picture, the audience must feel that the cloudburst covers a vast area and not just perhaps a tank of 20 x 20.

''I am an exhibitor and having a hard time to make ends meet at the present. Just what the future holds, God only knows, but I believe that the studios should stop showing the secrets of moving picture productions. It surely did not exploit the picture to tell that the Sahara Desert scenes in this or that picture were made out in Arizona.''

MR. HUDSON also brings up another interesting point in his letter: "I know I am right when I say that the present-day exhibitor or moving picture owner must draw away from the old circus type of advertising. The keynote of success is "personal contact." The time is at hand when the theatre and its services must be sold through personal contact and salesmanship methods.

"Of course, there will always be that group that will answer the street ballyhoo and other circus methods, but there remains a giant mass of people who must be sold through a personal relationship department, either of the amalgamated association of producers or the individual chains of theatres themselves."

TAKING up again a discussion of the ''sound picture,'' we call attention to an interview with Jesse L. Lasky on this subject. Declaring that sound is to be the most important development in the industry during the next five years. Mr. Lasky added that the development of sound in motion pictures would not take the form of dialogue presentations.

Mr. Lasky intimated that Paramount would enter the ''sound picture'' field in a big way. So far the Paramount plans have been kept secret, but it is believed detailed information will be made public shortly.

''TO make all pictures dialogue vehicles would be to turn the progress of the screen back at least ten years from where it is now,'' Mr. Lasky stated. ''The great value of the motion picture has been its power to touch swiftly upon action and then sweep away. This would be impossible were dialogue between the actors to be recorded.

''The use of sound will be dramatic, and will heighten intensely the effect of the picture. The hum of crowds, the roar of an angry mob, perhaps a shouted command, the shrill of a police whistle, the bark of a dog, a knock on a door when such a knock heightens tense suspense—all of these sounds will be heard in the picture of the future.

''They will mean a new type of sheer drama undreamed of in the past. A drama free of the limitations of stage walls or dialogue, having the whole world as its story field stripped of the silence that has held it mute in past years. The possibilities of this type of drama are fairly staggering. Yet they are certain to be realized.''

THE first anniversary of the Roxy Theatre is here. It is announced that approximately 6,500,000—more than the population of New York City—passed through the doors of the Roxy since they were first opened, and more than $5,500,000 has been paid in admissions.

WITH the arrival of ''The Enemy'' at the Capitol Theatre, New York, this week it is claimed that a record has been established by the house in the number of special feature pictures presented at that theatre directly after premiere runs.

WE have pointed out many times—and we shall continue to do so—that this industry is geared up wrong. "The public does not pull the pictures from the industry; the industry pushes the pictures onto the public," was and is our way of putting it.

This is exactly the reverse of the process used in stabilized industries. We hear a lot of talk about stability. So far as economy is concerned, it is either false economy or based on dire necessity, with the business of trying to lock the stable after the horse has fled.

The industry is also full of superstitions, phobias and other forms of nonsense.

But let's get back to this product question. This year, just as every other year, the production schedules will be decided on an arbitrary number of pictures. The number is fixed by the producer-distributor. This system is absolutely certain to result in some pictures that ought never to be made. In plain parlance, "Lemons."

One of the reasons for this cart-before-the-horse policy is the maintenance of jobs. Some slashing has been done at Hollywood. But the political regimes at the studios are still pretty much in power, in some instances engineered by overrated individuals with swelled heads.

And this condition of swollen ego is not confined to Hollywood, by any means. There's a lot of it in New York.

General Block Booking Suit Under Consideration

Joint Suits With Paramount Would Curtail Lengthy Court Proceedings And Hasten Final Decision

THE entire block booking situation may be cleaned up at one time in the Federal courts, as the result of Paramount's defiance of the Federal Trade Commission's order to cease and desist. Instead of carrying Paramount to the courts alone, it is said in Washington that the Commission may bring a general suit against all producers and distributors engaged in the practice. If this plan is pursued, or, as a matter of fact, in any event, it will bring about lengthy court proceedings which will doubtless be carried to the Supreme Court of the United States, and is bound to take a number of years for settlement.

It is pointed out that while the individual suit against Paramount would probably require two or three years before a final decision could be reached in the highest court, an incalculable length of time would be required to push to a conclusion the number of individual cases that would be required. If all of the companies are included in the suit, as is now proposed, this would enable the entire situation to be dealt with by one decision.

While the Federal Trade Commission, as usual, is maintaining its policy of silence regarding future action, it is known that it has under consideration the advisability of dealing with the situation "en bloc." The commission does explain, however, that if such a suit was brought, each of the companies which were to be named as defendants would first have to be given a hearing before the board of review to establish whether or not they were engaged in the practice. Such hearings are secret and the names of those who were to be prosecuted would not be divulged until the Government was ready to proceed in court.

In its decision of March 5th disapproving the report of compliance made by the Paramount Famous-Lasky Corporation, the Federal Trade Commission charges failure to the motion picture trade practice conference held in New York last October in the matter of eliminating block booking. The Commission stated that it proposes to proceed immediately to enforce its order unless satisfactory compliance is offered by Paramount.

The full text of the statement follows:

"The Federal Trade Commission today disapproved of the report of compliance set to it by the Paramount Famous-Lasky Corporation in response to an order to cease and desist issued to the company last July. The Commission further announced that it proposes to proceed immediately to enforce its order unless a satisfactory compliance is offered by the motion-picture concern.

"The order issued last July 9 prohibited the formation of a conspiracy in restraint of trade and competition, block booking of motion pictures, and the acquisition or threats of acquisition of theatres in any locality to enforce the sales of the company's pictures.

"The Paramount Famous-Lasky Corporation, in making its report of compliance, announced in its report that it had caused to be prepared a set of instructions which were sent to the district and branch managers of the corporation.

"The instructions were a discussion of block booking in which it was stated that no adequate substitute for block booking had been proposed in the trade practice conference of the motion picture industry held under auspices of the commission last

Instructions to District and Branch Managers Reveal That Company Will Continue Block Booking

FOLLOWING is the text of the Paramount report pursuant to the order of the Federal Trade Commission:

"Respondents Paramount Famous Lasky Corporation (formerly Famous Players-Lasky Corporation), Adolph Zukor and Jesse L. Lasky, pursuant to order entered herein July 9, 1927, as modified by order entered herein September 7, 1927, report as follows:

"Respondents, and each of them, deny that they have at any time made or entered into any conspiracy for the purpose of lessening or restraining competition, or restraining trade or commerce among the several states, or with foreign nations, in the business of producing, distributing or exhibiting motion picture films for profit or the business of producing or distributing such films, and they declare that they have no intention to make or enter into any such conspiracy. Instructions to Sales Force

"To All District and Branch Managers:

"There was recently held in New York under the auspices of the Federal Trade Commission a Trade Practice Conference of the Motion Picture Industry at which one of the principal subjects considered was that of block booking. It was the unanimous opinion of the producers and distributors engaged in the production and distribution of program pictures, that such pictures, as contrasted with special or super-special pictures, cannot be sold on a single picture basis. Program pictures, which are the backbone of the average theatre's annual program, are made for sale upon a wholesale and not a retail basis. It is largely upon the reputation and goodwill of their trade mark that they are sold and when sold on a wholesale basis they are necessarily so priced that the possibility of a few pictures failing to realize expectations is offset by the probability of some unusually good pictures. When a sale is of only such a part of a block as to make the sale in effect one on a retail rather than a wholesale basis, the per picture price must necessarily be increased to compensate for the loss of this averaging factor and for the additional expense and possible loss involved in having to offer the unsold pictures elsewhere. Indeed, a sale of a few pictures only out of a block may often ruin the saleability of the remainder of the block or be too small to be profitable and therefore be inadvisable at any price. The present selling policy of Paramount and the bases of its price adjustments are based on its long experience, including its several expensive efforts to sell on an individual picture basis, and are believed to be both entirely lawful and fair to exhibitors.

Six Points' Compromise

"In view, however, of objections which have been made to block booking, every effort was made to devise some other practicable selling method. No one has as yet been able to suggest such a method. But it is believed that the principal objections to the system, particularly those from the standpoint of the public, can be obviated,

Decision on Brookhart Measure Not Likely in Near Future

WITH the Pennsylvania coal strike and oil scandal hearings pending, as well as a varied assortment of other matters, it is not likely that the Interstate Commerce Committee of Senate will get around to a decision on the Brookhart bill for some time to come. It will be some days before the testimony submitted at the hearings on the Brookhart measure in printed and probably many additional days before the committee makes a complete study of the testimony after it is printed.

While a decision is being waited on the Brookhart bill, there will hardly be any action on the other anti-block bookings which have been submitted to the House. These other bills are all in committee and undoubtedly will lie dormant until the Brookhart decision is rendered. Meantime opponents of the Brookhart measure are not worrying over what may happen to the others if the committee acts unfavorably upon that one.

U. S. Planning on Quotas

Leading American Companies Contracting for Features to Be Made in England

WITH the Cinematograph Films Act in effect in England and the subject of quotas fixed, the larger American distributing companies are lining up to conform to the measure, and are completing contracts for British productions to be made in England and released in American controlled and other houses abroad.

The Famous-Lasky Film Service, Ltd., was among the first to arrange a contract, when on February 8th they signed a contract with T. A. Welsh, of Welsh, Pearson and Company, Ltd., for the distribution of three British feature films to be produced this year. Sir Harry Lauder will be starred in one of these. Another will be "Huntingtower," which was previewed at the Plaza Theatre on February 19th.

Since the signing of the contract with the Welsh concern it has since been reorganized as Welsh, Pearson, Elder Films, Ltd. The new concern proposes floating a $900,000 stock issue for production purposes and the building of a new studio.

Fox has also completed arrangements with A. E. Bundy, of the British Instructional Films, for four pictures to be produced for Fox British distribution. The Warner Bros. share of quota pictures will be produced under the supervision of Arthur Clavering, their London managing director.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer are known to be dickering for a series of pictures, on which no definite conclusion has yet been reached. The deal is being engineered by Sam Eckman, Jr., with a leading British company, and it is thought it will be concluded in the near future.

First National is not worrying to any extent over the British quota situation, as the company is well prepared to make all of its own productions abroad. Others of the American companies have made no announcement of their plans, but negotiations are said to be pending from which announcements will be forthcoming in the near future.

Blue Law Advocators Rebuked by Nebraskan

"MY Quaker mother taught me that I must accord to all persons the right to worship God in their own way and not try to compel them by law to worship ni my own way."

In these words, Representative Edgar Howard of Nebraska, in Washington, D. C., responding to petitions protesting against passage of the Lankford blue-Sunday bill, rebuked the reformers who are now making Washington their headquarters, preparatory to instituting a campaign for enactment of the measure.

"I cannot support such a bill," Mr. Howard protested. "I am a great lover of sports, yet I never attended a baseball game on Sunday, but I will fight to give my neighbor a chance to see a game on that particular day if he shall so desire.

"This is my fixed principle, and I must be true to it."

New Television Tests Are Planned by English Firm

Plans are now in the making for a new series of high power, two-way trans-continental television tests via short wave radio to be conducted by the Baird Television Development Company of London. Captain O. G. Hutchinson, managing director of the English firm, announced the intention of conducting additional tests, before departing for London. He expects to return soon with Mr. Baird, the inventor, to continue tests which will function between Newark, New Jersey, and London.

Many Opposed to Quebec's Movie-Closing Proposal

Considerable weight has been added to the arguments of those who are fighting the proposal of the Quebec Provincial Government to close the theatres of Quebec cities on Sundays by the official announcement of the Retail Merchants Association of Canada that many places of business will also be affected adversely by the step.

The Merchants Association, which has lined up with the Montreal exhibitors and the labor unions in opposing the move by Hon. L. A. Taschereau, Provincial Premier, to enforce the Lord's Day Observance Act of 1907, has pointed out that many places of business will come under the ban in addition to the theatres. These will include cigar, fruit, soft drink, stationery, drug and candy stores, gasoline service stations, garages, newsstands, restaurants, billiard halls, bowling alleys, amusement parks, athletic fields of all kinds, hockey arenas and others.

Some of those who have recently passed resolutions against Sunday theatre closing include the Montreal Chapter of the International Moulders Union and the Canadian Workers Federation of Returned Soldiers and Sailors.

T. O. Unit of Northwest to Increase Membership

It is generally understood that plans are under way to secure a 100 per cent membership of theatre owners in the Northwest Theatre Owners Association. It is thought that all theatres served with films out of the Minneapolis exchanges will be invited to join and this will bring the number of prospects to about 400. A portion of Wisconsin and the peninsula of Michigan will be included and this will bring in exhibitors who have been practically without affiliation owing to the fact that they are somewhat isolated and secure films from different distributing points. It is said that a plan will be offered to exhibitors under such liberal credit terms that even the small operators will not find the payment of dues a hardship.

Proposed Films Bill for Northern Ireland

The recently enacted British Films Law does not extend to Northern Ireland, according to advices to the Department of Commerce, Washington, D. C., from Trade Commissioner Geo. R. Canty, President.

As a result of the above-mentioned Films Act, there has been considerable agitation for a similar law in Northern Ireland, but no definite decision has yet been announced by the Ministry of Commerce in this respect. In the meantime the trade locally is proceeding with its plans for opposing such a bill, as well as endeavoring to secure the adjustment of the Entertainment tax to the English level. It is anticipated that both these matters will be fully dealt with at the next meeting of the White Cinema Club.

New Officers Elected at Meeting of M. P. D. A.

The Motion Picture Directors Association at its regular meeting held recently in Hollywood elected the following officers for the coming year:

Director, Henry Otto; assistant director, James Horne; technical director, Fred Newmeyer; treasurer, Frank Cooley; secretary, Francis Powers. The council chosen is composed of: Reginald Barker, William Beaudine, J. Reaves Eason, Phil Rosen, Roy Clements, George Irving and Norval MacGregor.

The association enters upon its 15th year on June 10th.

"All or None" Policy Denied by Kent at Hearing

Says Only Five Per Cent of Paramount Contracts Are for 100% of Product; Sessions on Brookhart Bill End

By CLARENCE L. LINZ

Washington Correspondent, Motion Picture News

WASHINGTON, March 2.—If the block booking bill, as written, does, as contended by the opposition, make illegal block booking and blind buying, it should be amended so as to make those actions permissive to the exhibitor, it was asserted by Senator Brookhart of Iowa, author of the measure, in bringing to a close the hearings before the Senate interstate commerce committee.

The sole purpose of the measure, Brookhart declared, is to outlaw coercion, to make impossible the "all or none" policy which he steadfastly insisted was being followed by the distributors, and to eliminate the situation where the theatres of one producer are able to get the films of another producer on favorable terms and to the detriment of the independent house.

Members of the committee, who had evinced great interest in the subject throughout the hearings, at the end of the testimony did not appear to be greatly impressed with the need for Government interference. For one thing, observers gathered, most of the exhibitors who appeared in support of the Brookhart measure were prosperous and successful, even under the conditions which they had outlined, and did not appear to need any sympathy. The majority of them had been from the larger towns and cities, and the greatest impression of sincerity was made by C. E. Williams, operator of a 350-seat house in Omaha, who tore the bill to pieces, told Brookhart to his face that he did not know anything about the motion picture business and declared that, as it stood, the bill was worthless, and if amended as proposed by Brookhart there would be nothing left in the measure and no reason, therefore, for its enactment.

The testimony of Sidney R. Kent, general manager for Paramount, also retained the attention of the committee during the time he was on the stand, telling how his business was operated and how the bill would affect him.

That there are abuses sometimes practiced in the selling of films was freely admitted by all. But the producer representatives claimed that these abuses were being cured as fast as they were discovered, and none of the exhibitors charged that any of the men on the other side of the table were personally responsible for, or even cognizant of, the individual cases which they cited.

Winding up his initial presentation of the opposition to the bill, Charles C. Pettijohn, attorney for the Hays organization, compared arbitration as practiced in the industry with the record of the Federal Trade Commission. The film boards handle 10,000 or more cases a year, he said, while the Federal Trade Commisison settled 113 in the last fiscal year. The commission would have to increase its personnel several hundredfold to care for the motion picture work, and its expense would be tremendous. If it were to set the differentials for single sales the number of disputes would probably be 30,000 or more a year.

Sees Another Russia

Taking over the film industry, it would be but natural to take over other industries from time to time, until, finally, we had here a parallel of the present Russian government with all its evils.

Catching sight of Canon William Sheafe Chase, censorship advocate and an interested spectator at the hearings, Pettijohn concluded by saying: "This is not the first occasion when people have stood before legislative committees in Washington and said 'I am a friend of the motion picture and I want to help you by tying you up with censorship, by telling you how to distribute your pictures and telling you what the price ought to be.'

"Oh, Lord, our thanks, we have survived
Attacks that would enslave us.
Our enemies, we fear them not,
But from our 'friends' please save us."

Block booking has existed almost from the beginning of the industry, but does not appear to have stifled its growth, declared Sidney R. Kent, general manager for Paramount. Efforts have been made in the past to get away from block booking, he continued, outlining the experiment he made a few years ago of showing the pictures to exhibitors and trying to sell them separately. The exhibitors refused to come in to see the films, and while he was trying to sell them singly they were making contracts for blocks with other producers, he told the committee.

Kent Attacks Bill

"I am perfectly willing to tear down block booking tomorrow if it has served its purpose, so far as our company is concerned," he added. "I am opposing the Brookhart Bill because it is impractical in theory, and would not be workable if passed.

"The fact that he gets 1,000 or 1,200 contracts on one picture and as high as 14,000 on another, he said, is prima facie evidence that full line forcing is not practiced, else he would get 14,000 contracts on every picture. On the contrary, only about five per cent of his contracts are for the full line, and the most of them are from big buyers," he said.

Mr. Kent explained that the producer cannot carry the entire burden of the unprofitable picture. The exhibitor must bear some of it. The producer must continually seek to produce pictures which will appeal to those who now are not interested in films, "explore new fields," and these pictures do not always pay. "Chang," for instance, is as clean a picture as can be had, made at great risk of life and health in Asia, yet it does not sell and is losing money.

"The exhibitor does not buy blindly by blind booking," he said, "since he knows the type of story a given star will produce, and buys on the basis of stars and directors." There will never be a time when productions will suit exhibitors and the public 100 per cent.

Taking up exhibitor production in answer to questions why the independent showmen could not go into the producing end, he cited First National as an outstanding proof that exhibitors could produce. "And that organization," he added, "had the most restrictive block booking system when it started that has ever been tried; an exhibitor had to buy stock in order to buy pictures; had to agree to take every picture made without exception; arbitrary exhibition values were set and the price was fixed, and the exhibitor could not cancel his contract for six years."

The biggest menace to the industry today is overseating and over production, Kent told the committee, particularly the "insane" competition in the building of thea-

Senate Committee May Refer Problem to Department of Justice

(Special Dispatch to Motion Picture News)

WASHINGTON, March.—At the conclusion of the Brookhart Bill, members of the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee expressed considerable interest in the possibility that the existing anti-trust acts might take care of any evils which exist in the motion picture industry.

This possibility was suggested by Senator Fess of Ohio and Senator Gooding, of Idaho, as well as by other members who attended the hearings from time to time.

The trend of their statements indicated that the committee will give full consideration to that possibility and that, very likely, they will leave it to the Department of Justice to handle.

If the question is referred to the Attorney General for an opinion as to whether this should be done, the answer will probably be an emphatic affirmative, as the Department does not like the idea of additional powers being given the Federal Trade Commission, which it believes is encroaching upon its own territory.

tres between producers. On the other hand, there is a crystallization of buying power coming about through the formation of exhibitor groups, such as that being fostered in New York by Aaron Sapiro, which will have a buying power, it is claimed, of $4,000,000.

Asked by Leo Brecher, New York exhibitor, if he would sell to the new organization on even terms, Kent declared that he would meet that question when it was put up to him in concrete form, with full information as to the new organization, its membership, houses, competition, etc., which he now does not have.

Paramount's Gross $100,000,000

Kent was questioned at length by Senator Brookhart as to earnings of his company. The gross receipts from all sources are nearly $100,000,000 a year, Kent replied. Film sales last year were about $42,000,000, of which $12,000,000 was foreign business. Of the $30,000,000 business done in this country, $8,000,000 was from many thousand small exhibitors and $22,000,000 from 1,240 large accounts, and it cost $4,000,000 to get the $8,000,000 worth of small exhibitor business.

Questioned as to salaries of executives, Kent said he could not tell, but when pressed by Senator Brookhart said his salary had been $100,000 a year up to last year, when it was cut to $75,000, being restored to its former figure at the beginning of 1928. In addition, he is supposed to get five per cent of the net remaining after deductions for depreciation and reserves.

The cure for any evils which may exist in block booking, Kent declared, is to be found in playing on percentage. "Personally," he said, "the remedy I see is the playing of pictures on a percentage basis. The reward is automatic for a good picture and the penalty is equally automatic for a bad one." Some 50 per cent of Paramount business is now being done on some form of percentage.

The Senator from Iowa was forced to listen to some very pointed criticisms of his bill, and of his lack of knowledge of the film industry during the testimony of C. E. Williams, president of the Theatre Owners' Association of Nebraska and Western Iowa. Mr. Williams proved to the Senator that he was unfamiliar with the text of the very bill which bears his name, when Brookhart insisted that it did not prohibit blind booking and the bill was read to show that it did.

Exhibitor Defends Block Booking

Williams prefaced his statement with the remark that all the things that had been discussed at the hearing were a surprise, that the men in the "sticks" didn't know anything about them. Block booking is the salvation of the small exhibitor, and if that privilege is taken away they will be exterminated. The Laemmle plan of furnishing a week's program, complete, for a small sum has been the means of saving many exhibitors in his territory who could not otherwise have survived, and it was not forced upon them. The screening privilege sought by the bill would mean nothing to the small exhibitor but added expense.

Showmen in the Nebraska territory are getting pictures within 30 days after they play the key cities, Williams said. They have to in order to survive, for good roads have made it easy to get to the large towns and, he pointed out, the small town man has no orchestra or organ, no vaudeville or presentation, but is selling the picture solely.

Questioned repeatedly by Senator Brookhart as to what he thought the bill was intended to do, Williams finally lost patience and told the Senator it was very evident that he knew nothing about the motion picture business. Brookhart declared the bill was not designed to prohibit block or blind booking, and if it did so it would be amended, Williams coming back with the statement that the bill as it stood was worthless and if amended would be without point, and there would be no reason for passing it.

Williams defended the arbitration system, pointing out that, with respect to intimidation, while the distributor representatives were responsible to their home offices, they were not kept employed because of the decisions they could give against exhibitors, but because of the films they sold them and were more likely to lean toward the exhibitor in deciding cases, because they might later want to sell him.

Henry A. Staab of Milwaukee made similar remarks, in response to inferences that he had originally testified otherwise, and added that often the small houses in his territory played pictures before they were shown in Milwaukee.

Passage of the bill, Williams asserted, would mean the elimination of the small man who now can be sure of getting a season's supply of good stuff, regularly and at a low figure.

Cochrane Is Witness

The independent producer also would be put out of business under the bill, it was declared by Robert H. Cochrane, vice-president of Universal. Taking up the blind buying provision of the bill, much to the dislike of Senator Brookhart, he pointed out that last year his company produced 443 pictures. It is geared up to high production at low prices, he said, and if he could not sell films until they were available for screening he could not bear the greatly increased financial burden, and would be forced out of business.

The quickest way to create a monopoly, he warned the committee, is to put the independent producer out of business, a thing which would be accomplished quickly by the bill.

A difference of opinion appears to exist between Senator Brookhart and the film man as to what is meant by the term "independent producer," the Senator believing that an independent producer is one who does not belong to the Hays organization.

An attempt by the reformers to get the bill through as a wedge toward Federal control was seen in the testimony of Canon William Sheafe Chase, superintendent of the International Reform Federation and general secretary of the Federal Motion Picture Council in America, who was granted five minutes' time by Chairman Watson with the proviso that he did not discuss censorship.

The basis of Canon Chase's statement was two amendments which he suggested to the measure, one declaring the production, distribution and exhibition of motion picture films a public utility, the other a provision that nothing in the bill should be construed to interfere with wholesale selling or booking of films except insofar as the practice was in restraint of competition.

The Canon's argument for his first amendment was that as the public is interested in motion pictures the industry should become a public utility.

He took issue with statements made by producer representatives that there was little left in the literature of the past which could be screened, declaring, in effect, that nothing had yet been touched from the right angle, charging the producers with appealing to the "gutter instinct," instead of to "higher, purer, better things."

Hearing on Brookhart Bill Ends

Arguments in Rebuttal

Again taking control of the situation, Brookhart supporters began their rebuttal of the opposition testimony. Reading from a letter he had written to Senator Brookhart at the close of the previous day's hearing, Frank Rembusch declared the independent exhibitors have no desire to interfere with the sales plan or distributing machinery of the producing companies, but charged that there is a "monopolistic scramble" among the producers "which is the real issue at present."

"Voluntary arbitration and compulsory arbitration are as different as Clara Bow and Ben Turpin," he declared, taking up that question. Compulsory arbitration is a part of the monopolistic aims of the producers.

Every producer engaged in all the three branches of the industry is a monopoly or a potential monopoly, in the belief of the independents.

C. E. Williams, of Omaha, who, the preceding day, had made a strong argument against the bill, was charged by Senator Brookhart with being a turncoat, declaring that at the New York conference he had voted with the independent exhibitors. Brookhart also declared that members of the film boards named by Pettijohn as favoring arbitration had written and telegraphed their approval of the bill. Pettijohn introduced telegrams from 30 of the 32 zones supporting arbitration, signed by exhibitor members of the boards.

Mr. Williams was not present to defend himself, having returned to his home upon receipt of the news that his theatre had burned.

Challenges Pettijohn's Figures

Challenging Pettijohn's figures of more than 800 productions last year, Leo Brecher, New York independent, declared there were 669 features suitable for general exhibition, of which 510 were made by the Hays organization producers, and 150, of which less than 100 were suitable, by the independents. This, he insisted, shows a monopolistic tendency.

Arbitration is frequently turned into oppression, Brecher told the committee, when, having lost his credit with the exchanges, a man is forced to put up $500 for each picture he gets. "That is boycott," declared Senator Gooding of Idaho.

The new contract does not correct any of the evils complained of, Brecher said.

Proponents of the bill sprung a "surprise witness" by putting Joseph Dondis, Rockland, Me., exhibitor, on the stand to tell of his fight with the Gray circuit. He told the full history of his house, declaring that Paramount had tried to put him out of business by cutting prices in competing houses, and having all other producers refuse to sell him. Pettijohn declared that if Dondis' story was true somebody ought to go to jail, and Sidney Kent, general manager for Paramount, told the committee that his company had an interest in but no control over the circuit, and this case was but one of a number of instances where competitor exhibitors were fighting. He is trying to settle such cases as come before him, and has refused frequently to sell to chains that are trying to force an independent out, selling to the independent instead.

The hearing was closed with a brief statement by Pettijohn, in the course of which he challenged Brecher's statement that the distributors owned as little as 15 per cent of the stock in some theatres, declaring that it had been given them in order to get their films. Pettijohn denied that such was the case, and asserted that no theatre had to give up a 15 per cent interest in order to get any particular company's production.

Senator's Ire Aroused

Table submitted to show the "full program" contracts in each State, and the maximum and minimum prices charged, together with a detailed statement, prepared at Senator Gooding's request, showing each contract in Idaho, aroused the ire of the Idaho Senator because, he said, his state had been discriminated against and was not given programs at $9.50 a week, which Williams had testified was the price he and other Nebraska exhibitors paid. He refused to consider an argument that Idaho was distant from the distributing city and costs of sales and distribution therefore increased, and demanded a similar statement for every other State, which was furnished after the hearing. He wasn't going to stand by and see the exhibitors in his State discriminated against, he declared.

Everybody behaved much more nicely than he had anticipated, Senator Watson declared in closing the hearings, after listening to mutual expressions of good will from both sides of the controversy. The committee will consider the testimony at the first opportunity, he assured all.

Paramount Answers Trade Commission

and to that end the producer and distributors at the Trade Practice Conference unanimously adopted the following expression of policy:

"1. The sales method known as block booking shall not be used for the accomplishment of any illegal purposes.

"2. No distributor shall require as a condition of permitting an exhibitor to lease its pictures that such exhibitor shall also lease pictures of another distributor.

"3. If an exhibitor shall claim within a reasonable time prior to the date fixed for the exhibition of any picture included in any block leased by him, that such picture will be offensive to the clientele of his theatre because of racial or religious subject matter, such claim shall be arbitrated by the board of arbitration of the proper zone, and, if sustained, such exhibitor shall be relieved of obligation to take and pay for such picture.

"4. If any exhibitor who has purchased an entire block of pictures offered by any distributor so elects within a reasonable time prior to the date fixed for exhibition of any picture included in such block, such exhibitor may refuse to take such picture by paying one-half of the allocated price thereof, provided that the pictus so rejected out of any block shall not exceed ten per cent of the number included in such block, and, if a rejected picture is resold by te distributor, one-half the net price received on such resale shall be credited against the exhibitor's obligation in respect of such picture up to the amount of such obligation.

"5. Reissues will not be included in any block with new pictures.

"6. News reels and short subjects will not be included in any block with features and the lease of news reels or short subjects blocks shall not be required as a condition of being permitted to lease feature blocks or vice versa.

"7. The matters dealt with by paragraphs three and four shall be covered by appropriate provisions to be included in the new standard form of contract.

"These modifications of block booking were approved by the exhibitor groups, both independent and affiliated.

"It is the desire of the Paramount-Famous-Lasky Corporation to cooperate unqualifiedly in the observance of these policies and any violation of them by any district or branch manager or any salesman will be regarded as prejudicial to the Corporation's interests.

"As you have already been instructed, sales of Paramount specials, or of this year's program of Foundation Pictures, or of the two series of news weeklies, or of the series of short subjects, must stand on the merits of the respective groups and the sale of news weeklies and short subjects cannot be made a condition precedent to a sale of the program features or of specials, or vice versa. However, this does not mean that you should relax in the slightest your efforts to sell as much as possible of Paramount product to every one of your accounts. Neither does it mean that you should not endeavor to sell all services at one time, nor that you should not continue to give preference in selling to an exhibitor who takes the largest amount of Paramount product, all the various kinds of product being considered.

Riders on Contracts

"You will note that the expressions of policy adopted by the Trade Practice Conference contemplate that provisions with respect to offensive pictures and with respect to optional rejection of not exceeding 10 per cent of pictures included in any sale of an entire block, are to be included in the new standard form of contract. That contract, of course, will not be ready until the time for selling next season's product. It is the desire of Paramount, however, immediately to put into effect the spirit and purpose of these provisions. Accordingly you are authorized to add to any contract hereafter made for the entire block of Foundation Pictures a rider in the following form:

"If the exhibitor shall in writing claim within two weeks prior to the date fixed for exhibition of any picture included in this contract that such picture will be offensive to the general public in the locality of his theatre because of racial or religious subject-matter, such claim shall be arbitrated by the board of arbitration mentioned in the within contract, and if sustained, the exhibitor shall be released of any obligation to take and pay for such pictures.

"If the exhibitor elects within two weeks prior to the date fixed for exhibition of any picture included in this contract, the exhibitor may refuse to take such picture by paying, at the time of serving notice of such election, one-half of the price herein allocated to such picture, provided, however, that the number of pictures so rejected shall not exceed 10 per cent of the entire number of pictures included in this contract. If a picture so rejected shall be resold by the distributor for the same run covered by this contract to a competitor of the exhibitor, one-half of the net price received by the distributor on such resale shall be credited against the exhibitor's obligations under this contract, up to the amount paid by the exhibitor as a condition of such rejection."

"A supply of printed copies of such riders will be sent you immediately.

Jury Bans Sunday Shows

Three Baltimore Defendants Found Guilty in Test Case; Appeal to Be Made

THE Baltimore Sunday movie test case resulted in a victory for the adherents of the blue laws. The three defendants in the case were John G. Callan and Charles F. Mules, president and vice-president respectively of th Liberty Defense League, and Walter Stierhoff, an operator.

The three were indicted by the grand jury and they were given a jury trial in the criminal court in Baltimore March 5th before Judge Albert S. J. Owens. After deliberating two hours the jury returned a verdict of guilty on each of the five indictments against the defendants.

On motion of Ex-Congressman John Philip Hill, who with Paul Boyd Mules represented the defendants, Judge Owens suspended sentence pending a motion for a new trial being filed. A fine is the penalty in each case if the court of appeals sustains the verdict.

The question of whether a moving picture theatre was an opera house figured largely in the proceedings. One of the charges against Callan was conducting a performance in an opera house on Sunday, which is forbidden by law.

It was argued by William H. Maynard, who, with Hillary W. Gans, prosecuted the case for the District Attorney's office, that a moving picture house is an opera house in the meaning of the act and that, regardless of the feeling they might have about the law, the jury should find a verdict of guilty if they found the law as he recited it and the facts as he presented them.

The defense contended that moving pictures were not included in the law in question and it was up to those who wanted it in the law to go before the legislature and have it put in.

The hearing of the case was largely attended, all seats in the courtroom being occupied, with a string of standees along the walls. Among the more conspicuous was Rev. W. W. Davis, of the Lord's Day Alliance.

Stanley Acquires More

Haring and Blumenthal Circuit Passes From Existence With Sale of Five Houses

WITH the acquisition by the Stanley Company of America of the five Haring and Blumenthal theatres, the latter circuit passes out of existence after a lengthy career. The houses that pass to the Stanley-Fabian chain are the Central, Union and Ritz in Jersey City and the Lincoln and Roosevelt in Union City, New Jersey.

The Stanley-Fabian Corporation, of which Jacob Fabian is the executive head, controls sixty-five theatres in New Jersey. Among these are the De Witt, Strand and Opera House in Bayonne, the United States and Bishop, as well as a house under construction at Hoboken with seating capacity of 3,500 and the new Stanley with 5,000 seats at Journal Square, Jersey City. The last named is to be opened this month and will be the third largest in the Metropolitan area and the fifth largest in the United States.

The deal just consummated, which brings to an end the activities of the Haring and Blumenthal circuit, marks the passing of the pioneer Hudson county theatre chain, which long was considered one of the most progressive in the field. Each of the acquired houses was a first run, the Lincoln and Central conducting vaudeville with pictures, the Ritz and Roosevelt straight pictures, and the National pictures with Vitaphone.

Addition of the five theatres of the Haring and Blumenthal group gives the Stanley Company of America direction of more than 275 houses in seven states and the District of Columbia, with the center of activities in Philadelphia, under the leadership of Irving D. Rossheim, recently elected to the presidency of the company.

Stanley Theatre Man Flies With Lindbergh

ULY S. HILL, of Albany, managing director of the Stanley houses in Albany and Troy, is today enjoying the distinction of being the only motion picture exhibitor who has been privileged to ride with Col. Charles A. Lindbergh. Mr. Hill flew with Lindy from Albany to Boston last week, following Lindbergh's stay of a day in Albany, during which he appeared at the state capitol at a joint legislative session.

May Sue All Producers on Block Booking

October and that all branch and district managers of the company were instructed to co-operate in enforcing the recommendations of the industry adopted at the trade practice conference.

"The present action of the commission is the result of the failure of the trade practice conference to provide for a final elimination of block booking."

The only step the Commission can take toward enforcement of its order by Paramount is to file a suit in the Federal courts asking them to order the company to comply. The order of the Commission of last July prohibited the formation of a conspiracy in restraint of trade and competition, block booking of motion pictures and the acquisition or threats of acquisition of theatres in any locality to enforce the sales of the company's pictures.

The hearings on the Brookhart block booking bill had nothing to do with the issuance this week of the Commission's rejection of the plan of compliance filed by Paramount, it is declared. Members of the Commission have followed the proceedings of the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee only casually, it being pointed out that nothing developed at the Capitol which had not already been divulged, either in the taking of testimony in the Paramount case or at the trade practice conference in New York last October. It is also understood that the Commissioners generally believe that the evils complained of at the hearings, other than block booking, represent troubles growing out of a situation existing in New York and not generally prevalent throughout the country.

Having made public its verdict on Paramount's offer, the Commission now is planning to release the so-called code of ethics adopted at the October conference, which will probably be made public next week.

Paramount to Continue Block Booking

Threats Are Forbidden

"The Trade Practice Conference also condemned building, buying, leasing, or otherwise acquiring or threatening so to do, of theatres by producers or distributors for the purpose and with the intent of intimidating or coercing exhibitors to take motion pictures produced or offered by such producer or distributor. Paramount-Famous-Lasky Corporation knows of no case where any of its employees has been guilty of any such practice and joins with all branches of the industry in vigorously condemning any such practice. District and branch managers and salesmen must thoroughly understand that the Corporation's activities in the field of exhibition must never be used in the remotest way as a means of compelling any purchase of this Corporation's product. Any suggestion in any form by any employee of this Corporation that if an exhibitor does not purchase this Corporation's product, this Corporation will acquire a theatre in competition with him, will be regarded as prejudicial to the interests of this Corporation and is strictly forbidden."

Schenck Wires Protest on Brookhart Bill

JOSEPH M. SCHENCK, president of United Artists, has added his protest to many others against the Brookhart Bill. In a wire to Representative Crail in Washington he brands those in favor of the Brookhart Bill largely as insignificant exhibitors trying to get pictures without paying a reasonable price.

The wire was as follows:

"Any reflection upon the motion picture industry of the United States by proposed Congressional enactment will only encourage further hostile measures on the part of the foreign governments. The men in favor of the Brookhart Bill are insignificant exhibitors interested in getting pictures without paying a reasonable price. They are not the constructive element in the industry, and have never helped the progrss of the American motion picture."

Now in the course of filming are: "The Scarlet Dove," under the direction of Arthur Gregor, with Robert Frazer, Josephine Borio and Lowell Sherman; "Clothes Make the Woman," under the direction of Tom Terriss, with Eve Southern and Walter Pidgeon; "Ladies of the Night Clubs," under the direction of George Archainbaud, with Barbara Leonard and Ricardo Cortez; "Lingerie," under the direction of George Melford, the cast yet to be announced.

The following productions are now being cut and edited: "The House of Scandal," "Bachelor's Paradise," "Their Hour" and "Power" (tentative).

F. J. Harris to Run for Re-election to Pa. Senate

Frank J. Harris, of Pittsburgh, one of the controlling heads of the Harris Amusement Company, which operates scores of theatres in Western Pennsylvania, Ohio and West Virginia, has announced his candidacy for re-election as a member of the Pennsylvania Senate from the Forty-Fifth district in Allegheny county. He filed his nomination petition, which permits him to run in the Spring primaries, at the State Department in Harrisburg early in March.

Senator Harris was elected to the Senate in 1926 to fill the unexpired term of his brother, the late John P. Harris, who also was one of the heads of the amusement concern.

Two Stories Bought for Gotham Production

The motion picture rights to ''The Bowery,'' by Harry O. Hoyt, an underworld drama, and ''Law of the Blue Ridge,'' a mountaineer tale by Alan Swinburne, have been purchased by Gotham.

Universal Chief Denies Rumors of Sale

Declares Du Pont Interests Not Dickering for Company; Also Refutes Henigson Report

PERSISTENT rumors are circulating regarding Universal, among them being one to the effect that the company is shortly to be purchased by the Du Pont interests, and another is to the effect that Henry Henigson, general manager of the company at Universal City, is to be relieved of his duties in that connection. Both reports have been denied by Carl Laemmle.

The report regarding the sale to the Du Ponts was emphasized on the West Coast with the arrival there of W. S. McKay, an attorney for the company. In certain quarters it is asserted that the Du Ponts are anxious to buy, and, in fact, that they had already purchased the interest of R. H. Cochrane.

Carl Laemmle, President of Universal, is ill at his home in Los Angeles, but, despite that he has emphatically denied that there is any truth in the rumor of the reported sale; he declares that McKay is on the Coast merely to confer with him on certain matters regarding production.

The rumor regarding Henigson is claimed to be substantiated by the fact that he departed late last week from Los Angeles, and is now in New York. He arrived here Tuesday with a print of ''We Americans.'' From the Universal home office the announcement is made that the Henigson visit has no significance, that it is merely in accordance with the practice of the company of interchanging officials between the East and West Coasts. This system, it is declared, has been extremely beneficial.

Henigson, it is reported, is here to consult with Mr. Rubel, Mr. Metzger and Mr. Cochrane on the final composition of the program of pictures constituting Unisal's product for 1928-29.

With regard to the coming season's product, Universal apparently has little to worry over. It is said that a little over 65 per cent of the proposed list of pictures is either completed or being cut and titled at Universal City. Sufficient stories to complete the program have been purchased, but Hengson has a number of prospective pictures in mind, the sales values of which it is necessary for the distribution department to pass upon.

The current balance sheet of Universal for the year ending November 5, 1927, shows a net profit of $1,502,666. This includes reports of all subsidiaries and the deduction of Federal taxes. The total assets are listed at $13,131,016. Film sales and rentals for the twelve months amounted to $23,398,569. Of this amount $14,904,153 was realized from the domestic market, and $8,494,415 from foreign sales. Income from theatre operations was $2,799,742 for the United States, and $1,094,970 from foreign countries.

Paramount Using About 2,000 Extras at Studio

AN average of 2,000 extras and 1,000 or more technicians and laborers were placed on the Paramount studio payroll the first part of this week, Paramount reports. Most of them are being used for large scenes in "The Patriot," which Ernst Lubitsch is making. The director is employing 1,000 foot soldiers and 400 horsemen for certain of these scenes.

Other pictures in work which require large casts of extras are: "Three Sinners," "Easy Come, Easy Go," "The Fifty-Fifty Girl," "A Date with a Duchess" and "Odd Fellows."

The Paramount studio will continue to use many extras during the coming month, it is said, when other pictures will be started.

M. L. Simmons Gotham's Advertising-Publicity Head

Michael L. Simmons, formerly of The Morning Telegraph and The Film Daily, succeeds Lon Young as director of advertising and publicity for Gotham Productions.

Mr. Simmons has been foreign representative for Universal, and has done some work editing and titling films as well as broadcasting a weekly movie talk over one of the New York radio stations. In his work for Gotham he will peruse books, plays and scripts for the selection of screening material.

Mr. Young leaves for Hollywood on March 5th to assume a position as supervisor of production with another company.

Warner's Metropolitan in Baltimore in New Hands

Warner's Metropolitan Theatre, Baltimore, is reported to have been taken over by Equity Theatres Corporation, of Philadelphia, of which William Cohn is president, and Pop Carson a head executive.

R. Neisenson, who has been acting as resident manager of the Metropolitan, has gone to New York again and Jack Levy, theatre manager for Equity, is now at the Metropolitan looking over the Baltimore situation.

Brenon Will Direct New Goldwyn Production

One of Samuel Goldwyn's forthcoming productions for United Artists will be directed by Herbert Brenon, by the terms of a contract signed last Friday evening before Mr. Goldwyn sailed for Europe. Neither Vilma Banky nor Ronald Colman, Goldwyn stars, is to be involved in the new project. Information regarding the picture and its cast will be forthcoming when Mr. Goldwyn has returned from the continent.

Distributors May Refuse to Sell to Exhibitors Association

As the result of the organization of the Motion Picture Exhibitors Association, Inc., in New York, there is likely to be a considerable controversy when that body gets to functioning along the lines outlined. Considering it in the light of a booking combine, it is probable that the national distributors will refuse to sell their product to the organization through Aaron Sapiro, the organizer, as agent.

The larger distributing organizations are willing to sell exhibitor members of the organization as individuals, but they declare the right of the wholesaler to sell or refuse to sell to whom they please. They say there is nothing in the statute books that would compel them to dispose of their product through the agent of a booking combine.

The New York group included in the membership of the Motion Picture Exhibitors Association, Inc., was organized by Sapiro for the betterment of their own conditions and as a protective organization to their own rights, according to announcements.

Musicians Have Flareup

Vitaphone Causes Disturbance in St. Louis and Benefit Performance in Atlanta

The use of Vitaphone and the proposition of musicians offering their services free at a benefit performance brought flare-ups and threats of trouble between musicians' unions and theatre managers in two widely separated cities during the past week.

In St. Louis on Saturday March 3rd, the musicians' union temporarily delayed the premier showing at the Grand Central Theatre of the Vitaphone feature, "In Old San Francisco," Late in the afternoon a temporary agreement was reached between the musicians and Skouras Brothers Enterprises, operators of the theatre, and the showing was allowed to go on. The terms of the temporary truce were not revealed.

Since the opening of the Vitaphone shows in St. Louis the musicians' union has been contending that a complete orchestra should be maintained at the theatre notwithstanding there is absolutely no need for their services. The union has a rule that the size of the orchestra is governed by the seating capacity of the theatre and this is arbitrarily enforced even if the business of the theatre is not up to normal.

The union sees a decided menace in the Vitaphone and similar devices and they are making a firm stand at this time to establish the precedent that a full sized orchestra must be maintained even if the players do not play a note.

The executive board of the Atlanta Federation of Musicians refused to grant permission for its members to play at a midnight show at the Howard Theatre to raise funds for the Lions' Club work for underpriveleged children, and specifically for the aid of the Better Babies Clinic now being conducted by that organization.

The Atlanta Film Board of Trade cooperated with the Lions and the managers of the Howard, Loew's Grand, Keith's Georgia and the Capitol in arranging the benefit. All indications pointed to a brilliant success until the adverse decision of the musicians' union forced the sponsors to abandon the undertaking.

C. B. Bearden, business manager of the union, explained the refusal by saying that no formal request was made before the executive board until two days before the proposed benefit, though announcements appeared in the newspapers several days previously. He objected to the managers agreeing to help stage a benefit without first consulting the musicians' union.

Educational in Deal With Tiffany-Stahl

Educational Pictures will distribute Tiffany-Stahl features in the Dominion of Canada as the result of a contract just signed by E. W. Hammons, president of Educational, who has been negotiating with Ed J. Smith, general manager of Tiffany-Stahl.

Oscar Hanson, Educational's general manager in Canada, with headquarters in Toronto, is preparing a selling and exploitation campaign in behalf of the Tiffany-Stahl product. He is now conferring with Mr. Smith on a sales policy for all the features to be handled for the Canadian market.

United Artists Producers Preparing New Releases

Norma Talmadge, Rex Ingram, D. W. Griffith, Gloria Swanson, Charlie Chaplin and other independent producers for United Artists are busy preparing films for release next fall.

On March 1 Miss Talmadge began work on "The Woman Disputed," under the direction of Henry King. On March 15 Ingram is expected to launch in England an English-made picture with an English cast. Griffith has chosen three featured players for his next picture, "The Battle of the Sexes," scheduled to go into production also on the 15th.

Probably within the next two weeks Chaplin will begin a new comedy; he is now completing the story with the assistance of Harry Crocker. Miss Swanson expects to launch her next vehicle within the near future. Howard Hughes and his Caddo unit are now making "Hell's Angels." Edwin Carewe will begin directing Dolores del Rio in "Revenge" in two weeks' time, Finis Fox having finished the script.

United Artists has completed but not released "The Garden of Eden," "Two Lovers," "Tempest," "Ramona" and "Steamboat Bill, Jr."

Eight Shorts from M-G-M During Month of March

Eight short subjects will have been presented to exhibitors by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer exchanges by the end of March. A new Technicolor historical number, "The Czarina's Secret," is the highlight of this group of releases.

"Came the Dawn," is the title of the first release for the month. It stars Max Davidson and was released March 3. "Amazing Lovers," a Ufa Oddities, will be issued on the 10th. On that same date an "Our Gang" comedy entitled "Edison-Marconi and Co." will be released.

The Technicolor offering is set for March 17, a date on which "Aching Youth," a Charley Chase comedy, will be released also. Another of the Ufa shorts, "The Monarch of the Glen," will come on March 24. Stan Laurel and Oliver Hardy, Hal Roach's comedy team, will be seen in "From Soup to Nuts" and Davidson will be seen in another comedy, "Blow by Blow."

Three Paramount Pictures Permanently Titled

George Bancroft's second starring production for Paramount will be known as "The Dragnet"; "Odd Fellows" has been selected as the title for the newest W. C. Fields-Chester Conklin co-starring comedy, now in production. "A Date With a Duchess" replaces "Super of the Gaiety" as the title for the Adolphe picture which will go into production following completion of his present picture, "A Night of Mystery."

"Trail of '98" Opens March 20 at Astor

THE premiere of "The Trail of '98," the special production built around the Klondyke gold rush days, will take place on the evening of March 20 at the Astor Theatre in New York City. The photoplay was directed by Clarence Brown from an adaptation of a story by Robert W. Service. The musical score for the picture is being rapidly completed by David Mendoza and William Axt.

The featured players in the film include Dolores del Rio, Ralph Forbes, Tully Marshall and Karl Dane.

Brill Opens Distributing Office With Luncheon

Close to 150 exhibitors and representatives of the press were guests of David Brill, president of the recently organized Brill Distributing Corporation at a luncheon at the Hotel Astor on Thursday of this week. The affair marked the opening of the New York offices of the company at 729 Seventh Avenue.

The Brill corporation already has announced 29 Ufa productions for release during the coming year. Six of these will be available for distribution in the Eastern states between the present and the first of September. Among these are, "A Modern Du Barry," featuring Maria Corda; "Tartuffe, the Hypocrite," with Emil Jannings; and "Streets of Algiers," starring Camilla Horn.

The sales force will start operations Monday of next week. Jack Meyers is New York and New Jersey sales manager, Sidney Strauss in Manhattan and the Bronx, Jerry Sobel for Long Island and New York State, Adolph Weiss for New Jersey and Joseph Levee for Brooklyn. Harry T. Scully has been named New England Division sales manager. Joe Stock is treasurer.

Fox Completed 7 Features During Last Month

Seven features were finished by Fox Films during the month of February at the studio on the Coast. Among them is "Honor Bound," the picture in which Estelle Taylor has the role opposite George O'Brien, marking her first appearance under the Fox aegis for some time. Another of the pictures was "Dressed to Kill," a comedy of the underworld featuring Edmund Lowe and Mary Astor, which comes to the Roxy Theatre in New York the week of March 10th. "The Escape" and "The Painted Post" were also among the completed batch of films.

Col. J. A. Cooper Loses Limb in Train Accident

Colonel John A. Cooper, president of Motion Picture Distributors Association of Canada, Toronto, suffered the loss of a foot and was otherwise injured when he fell under a moving train at Regina, Sask., last Sunday, while on a tour of Western film boards of trade. His condition is reported as satisfactory.

Slight Increase Due In Features This Year

More Productions by Independents Will Swell Totals Over Those of Last Season

WHILE a number of the producing companies have not yet definitely decided upon their 1928-29 programs, and comparatively few figures are available, it is likely that there will be at least as many feature pictures produced during the coming year as were turned out last year, and possibly more. Any deficit in the number of productions to be made by the larger companies will doubtless be more than made up by the independents, a number of which are planning unusually active seasons.

Though a number of the companies still have under consideration the pictures to be made during the season, several have announced just how many features will make up their programs. Paramount will have approximately seventy pictures, though there may be a few more or a few less than that number. The Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer program will be made up of fifty-two features. Pathe is planning for the production of forty-three. F B O will increase its output to sixty releases, considerably more than that company had last year.

Just how many features will be included in the First National program is not yet definitely known, nor is the output for 1928-29 from the Fox studios. A conference has been called for the latter part of next week for First National executives, at which time production plans for the season will be discussed and a program will likely be mapped. The Fox total will not be determined until the return of W. R. Sheehan, but it is probable it will number about fifty, the same as for the past year.

United Artists has decided upon eighteen productions, while Universal and Warner Brothers are still busy lining up the season's product. No word has yet been forth coming from either company with regard to the programs to be undertaken. It seems unlikely that either company will produce fewer pictures than they did last season.

The independents are planning for bigger things than they have for some time past, with many of the companies showing increases in the number of productions to be made. James Cruze, who has several outstanding box-office successes to his credit, has now cast his lot with the independents and will make four specials and supervise sixteen others for the independent market. Tiffany-Stahl are planning on an output of thirty-six features, while Gotham will have thirty. Columbia has not yet decided upon a definite total. Rayart, Sterling Productions, I. E. Chadwick, Jesse Goldburg, Excellent Pictures and others of the independents are not ready yet to announce their complete schedules.

M-G-M, Paramount to Issue More Ufa Films

MORE Ufa pictures than the four stipulated annually under the present agreement will be taken over for distribution in America by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and Paramount, a general meeting of Ufa officials in Berlin last week indicated. A result of the meeting is the shortening of the agreement time between the three companies. The agreement now expires August 31, 1932, four years having been stricken off.

The German company will retain a 50 per cent interest in Parufament, which in the future will handle American films only, while Ufa will distribute only European films. The playing time for Paramount releases in Ufa theatres was reduced from 50 to 33 1/3 per cent. Both Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and Paramount, it is said, will be required to live up to their agreements in Germany whether to acquire theatres or produce.

The plan to increase the number of Ufa films issued by the two American companies will not affect Ufa's plan to release pictures in America, it is understood.

Fitzpatrick to Release 6 Reels of Schubert's Life

Six one-reel productions, each telling a complete episode in the life of Franz Schubert, the composer, are announced for early release by James A. Fitzpatrick, president of Fitzpatrick Pictures, releasers of the Famous Music Masters series of short subjects. The Schubert films will be released under the general title of The Schubert Centennial Series and will be accompanied with full orchestrations of the composer's music, some 76 of his works compiled by Nathaniel Finston.

The series was made in Vienna and in the vicinities and locales in which the composer spent his life. The Stadt theatre in Grien was used as interiors of some of the incidents. Frans Slavicek, loaned by the Vienna Opera Company, plays the title role and is supported by a Viennese cast.

This year the Schubert Centennial is being celebrated throughout the world.

First Division Announces Three New Releases

Three pictures have been announced for release during March and April by First Division Distributors, Inc. The first, "The Masked Angel," starring Betty Compson and produced by I. E. Chadwick, is an adaptation of "Rescue," a magazine story by Evelyn Campbell. Frank O'Connor directed. The second, "Souls Aflame," produced by Robert S. Furst and directed by Raymond Wells in the Ozarks, has Gardner James as the featured player. "Fagasa" is the third production, which was made on a United States possession in the Samoan group of the South Seas. Mr. Wells directed this picture also; in the cast, which includes natives of the isle, are Leo Kelley, Gael Kelton and Wells.

Indictments Are Likely as Echo of Recent Chicago Strike

POSSIBLE indictments as an echo of the recent Chicago strike seem likely against the Chicago Film Board of Trade and its members. The indictments, it is said, will be sought by the Department of Justice in the Federal court at Chicago on the charge of conspiracy in restraint of trade.

These charges, it is said, grow out of the alleged refusal to sell pictures to theatres which endeavored to remain open during the strike. As a result of these conditions, it is said, these houses found it necessary to close their doors.

The Department of Justice is said to have had the whole Chicago matter under investigation for some time past, and to have secured enough information to warrant the asking of indictments.

Columbia's Foreign Deal

Will Distribute Several German, French and British Productions Through U. S. Exchange

JOE BRANDT, president of Columbia Pictures Corporation, has completed arrangements through Frederick E. Shoninger, Columbia's European representative, whereby the company will distribute throughout the United States a number of outstanding photoplays produced by European and British independent producers. The deal will be handled on a reciprocal basis, with Columbia Pictures being booked more extensively into German, French and British theatres.

Shoninger, the company representative with headquarters in Paris, is now negotiating for several British, French and German produced pictures that have been acclaimed on the other side. These pictures will be distributed here by Columbia with the accompaniment of a selling campaign backed by special advertising and exploitation.

In discussing the proposition, Joe Brandt said:

"On my last trip abroad there were brought to my attention a number of motion pictures, produced on a lavish scale, which had every quality to make them successful for exhibition in this country. I am not referring to those ponderously produced German or French pictures that speak an idiom foreign to our American psychology, but of several outstanding pictures that are on a par with the best that are produced in the United States.

"Mr. Shoninger is completing negotiations that I entered into at that time, and Columbia expects to have several of these pictures to offer to the trade some time during next season. It is my belief that the American public is interested in these outstanding foreign productions. It is good showmanship as well as good business practice to give the public what it will pay to see. Bringing these pictures before the American public will also go a great way toward building up accord between the motion picture industries of the old and new worlds."

Merchants of Quebec Fight Theatre Closing

A CAMPAIGN against theatre closing in the Province of Quebec on Sundays has been launched by the Retail Merchants' Association of Canada. The Association has appealed to the public to support its efforts against theatre Sunday closing.

The Retail Merchants of Canada has circulated petitions, addressed to the premiere of Quebec, in which it is pointed out that patrons who attend Sunday shows in Montreal represent 75 per cent of the laboring people; that the closing of theatres on Sundays would add to the privations of the workers, and that the Federal Lord's Day Act of Canada, promulgated 20 years ago, has ceased to have any compulsory effect and has become obsolete.

Mix Films Producers Sail for Argentine March 17

Fred Kley and James S. Douglass, of the Hollywood-Argentine Cinema Company, who will produce the series of Tom Mix films to be made at Buenos Aires and to be distributed by F B O Pictures, will sail with their technical staff for the Argentine on March 17th. Mix will follow the second week of June when he will have finished his ten-weeks' tour of the Keith-Albee-Orpheum circuit.

Upon their arrival in the Argentine metropolis, the producers will start to work supervising the erection of a studio which is to cover 500 square feet. The space will include five stages, dressing rooms, laboratory and all technical and business departments, it is said. It is planned to inaugurate a beauty contest in a prominent Argentine newspaper in the hope of finding new players who may be groomed for parts.

Christie Company Plans Hollywood Realty Project

Following a decision on the part of the Christie interests to divorce their film activities from their allied real estate and investment affairs, a separate office has just been opened in the Hollywood Security Building, Hollywood, by the Christie Realty Corporation, under the management of Wm. S. Helman.

This company has heretofore maintained headquarters at the studio at Sunset and Gower Street in Hollywood, but by reason of the recent increase in its activities, it has been decided to establish separate headquarters for it.

The company owns a number of pieces of property in Hollywood and the San Fernando Valley, and has lately embarked upon a development program which calls for several important improvements on various of its vacant holdings.

Wm. S. Holmean, treasurer and manager of the Realty Corporation, has resigned as secretary of the Christie Film Company in order to devote his time to this company and the personal investment matters of the Christie brothers. His duties at the studio will be assumed by Earl D. Shanks.

Five Stern Comedies Set for March Release

Five two-reel comedies, produced by Stern Brothers for distribution through Universal exchanges, have been slated for release this month. They include one each of the comedy series produced by the Sterns.

Heading the list is "The Newlyweds' Success," directed by Gus Meins and featuring Snookums, Jack Bartlett and Addie McPhail. Following is "Indoor Golf," also directed by Meins with Harry Long, Stella Adams, Gene Laymon and Derelys Perdue in the leads. "Buster Shows Off" is another March release; it stars Arthur Trimble, Doreen Turner and Tige, the dog, and will be issued on the 14th.

The final two comedies for the month will be "Watch George," directed by Sam Newfield with Sid Saylor and Charlotte Dawn in the cast, and "No Blondes Allowed," in which Charles King and Charles Doherty were directed by Francis Corby. These are March 28th and March 31st releases, respectively.

Six Features Due from Pathe During March

Six features—three De Mille films and three Pathe westerns—are being released this month by the Pathe exchanges.

On March 4 "Chicago" and "Marlie the Killer" were distributed. The first stars Phyllis Haver and has Victor Varconi in the male lead. "Marlie" is the first vehicle of a new dog star, "Klondyke." March 11 releases are: "The Blue Danube" and "Saddle Mates." Leatrice Joy, Joseph Schildkraut and Nils Asther are the principal players in "The Blue Danube," Wally Wales and Peggy Montgomery, the important ones in the western. For March 25 "Midnight Madness" and "The Bullet Mark" have been set. "Midnight Madness" stars Jacqueline Logan, with Clive Brook the masculine lead, and "The Bullet Mark" Jack Donovan.

M-G-M Plans "Four Walls" as Vehicle for Gilbert

"Four Walls," a stage play by Dana Burnet and George Abbot which recently played at the John Goldwyn Theatre in New York, is to be a starring vehicle for John Gilbert for whom Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer has scheduled William Nigh as director. Alice D. G. Miller will scenarise the play, which is a story of a criminal and his endeavors to achieve regeneration.

5. Upon written notice given to the Secretary of the Board of Arbitration at least seven (7) days prior to the date fixed for the hearing of any controversy submitted for arbitration each of the parties to such controversy shall have the right to challenge not more than two members of the Board of Arbitration, in which case the Distributors' alternate representative or representatives or the Exhibitors' alternate representative or representatives, as the case may be, shall act as a member or members of the Board of Arbitration to hear and determine such controversy in place of the member or members thereof challenged.

6. In case of the refusal, disqualification, challenge or disability of any Distributor's representative to hear and determine any such controversy the remaining Distributor's representatives or representative shall appoint from the Distributor's alternate representatives a substitute for such Distributor's representative.

RULE II

POWERS OF BOARD OF ARBITRATION

1. The members of the Board of Arbitration shall at each meeting thereof designate from among their number a chairman whose duty and authority as chairman shall be strictly limited to maintaining order to the end that all proceedings before the Board of Arbitration shall be conducted speedily and with decorum.

2. The Board of Arbitration shall have general power, after a thorough and impartial hearing of any dispute or controversy, (1) to determine such dispute or controversy, (2) to make findings thereon, (3) to direct what shall be done by either or both parties with respect to the matter in dispute, and shall fix the maximum amount (not exceeding that specified in the arbitration clause of the Standard Exhibition Contract) which each such distributor may demand as security pursuant to said arbitration clause in the event of the failure of the exhibitor to submit to arbitration or to comply with the award.

3. It shall adopt its own rules of procedure and practice, which shall provide for reasonable notice to the parties of the time and place of the hearing and of the nature of the dispute, afford the parties an opportunity to be heard in person or by counsel and to submit evidence.

4. The findings, determination and directions of the Board of Arbitration upon such controversy shall be conclusive and binding upon the parties thereto.

5. In any controversy submitted to a Board of Arbitration upon the complain of a distributor which is determined in favor of the exhibitor the Board of Arbitration may in its discretion include in its decision or award an award of a sum to be paid by the distributor to the exhibitor not to exceed the cost to the exhibitor of railroad transportation from and return to the city or town in which the exhibitor's theatre is located and an additional sum not to exceed $10 provided the exhibitor has attended the hearing.

6. The Board of Arbitration shall not have power or authority to adopt or apply any rule which shall be at variance with any of the provisions of the Standard Exhibition Contract or the rights and obligations of the parties thereunder.

7. The Board of Arbitration shall not entertain a claim or controversy unless the same arises under any contract other than those mentioned in paragraphs (a), (b) and (c) of this Rule, excepting with the written consent of both parties to such claim or controversy.

8. Every dispute or controversy must be submitted for determination to the Board of Arbitration within nine (9) months after the date of the breach of contract or of the act of omission or commission out of which such dispute or controversy shall have arisen. A dispute or controversy shall be deemed submitted when a written statement thereof is delivered to the Secretary of the Board of Arbitration. A claim or controversy which cannot be submitted for arbitration because of the limitation of time prescribed in this paragraph may not be introduced as a counterclaim.

9. Members of the Film Board of Trade shall not proceed as provided in paragraph three of Rule IV of these Rules unless the decision or award of the Board of Arbitration determines a claim or controversy arising out of

(a.) A contract which contains or incorporates by reference all of the numbered articles of the Standard Exhibition Contract filed with the Motion Picture Producers & Distributors of America, Inc., idetnified by the signature of its President on March 1, 1926, or

(b.) A contract bearing a date prior to the 1st day of April, 1926, the provisions of which are substantially in accord with the Uniform Exhibition Contract, or

(c.) A contract which contains or incorporates by reference all of the numbered articles of the Standard Exhibition Contract filed on May 1, 1928, with the American Arbitration Association, identified by the signatures of the Contract Committee appointed by the 1927 Motion Picture Trade Practice Conference.

RULE III

REFERENCE OF CONTROVERSIES TO BOARD OF ARBITRATION

1. Whenever possible distributors and exhibitors shall endeavor to settle claims without resorting to arbitration.

2. Whenever a member of the Film Board of Trade shall be unable to settle a claim or controversy with an exhibitor arising under a contract containing the arbitration clause, such member shall notify the Secretary of the Film Board of Trade (located in the city out of which such exhibitor is served) that such member desires to submit the claim or controversy to the Board of Arbitartion having jurisdiction thereof, advising the Secretary of the name and address of the exhibitor and the nature of the controversy. The Secretary shall thereupon give written notice to the member, the exhibitor, the local Exhibitors' Association and the Board of Arbitration that the controversy has been referred to the Board of Arbitration at the request of such member and of the time and place of hearing.

3. Likewise upon receipt by the Secretary of the Film Board of Trade of a notice from any exhibitor that such exhibitor desires to submit to arbitration a controversy with a distributor arising under a contract containing the arbitration clause, the Secretary shall give written notice to the exhibitor, the distributor, the local Exhibitors' Association and the Board of Arbitration having jurisdiction, that the controversy has been referred to the Board of Arbitration at the request of the exhibitor.

4. In case either party to a controversy referred to the Board of Arbitration shall demand a hearing thereon in less than five days for reasons deemed by the Board of Arbitration sufficient, the notice provided for in paragraphs 2 and 3 thereof may be dispensed with and in such case twenty-four hours' written notice of the time and place of the hearing shall be given to the parties to the controversy, the local Exhibitors' Association, and the members of the Board of Arbitration.

5. Nothing herein contained shall be construed to prohibit the filing of claims or controversies by members or exhibitors directly with a Board of Arbitration having jurisdiction thereof, pursuant to the rules of procedure and practice adopted by such Board of Arbitration.

6. Each of the parties to a controversy submitted for arbitration shall have the right to one adjournment of the hearing thereof until the date of the next succeeding regular meeting of the Board of Arbitration by sending a written demand therefor at least three (3) days prior to the date fixed for the hearing of such controversy, addressed to the Secretary of the Board of Arbitration.

7. If either of the parties to a controversy, regularly submitted for arbitration, fails to appear at the time fixed for the hearing thereof, the default of such party shall be noted. In case of a default in appearance of the complainant, the complaint shall be dismissed, and in case of default in appearance of the respondent, the Board of Arbitration shall hear the evidence of the complainant and shall make an award to the same effect as if both parties had been present.

The Board of Arbitration may, in its discretion, upon application setting forth reasonable grounds, made within seven days after an award has been rendered open the default of either party upon such terms and conditions as may be deemed just.

RULE IV

ENFORCEMENT OF DECISIONS OF BOARD OF ARBITRATION

1. The Secretary of the Board of Arbitration shall from time to time notify in writing the Secretary of the Film Board of Trade located in each city out of which the exhibitor is served of (a) the name and address of each exhibitor who has been found by such Board of Arbitration (1) to have refused to submit to arbitration a controversy arising under a contract containing the Arbitration Clause, or (2) to have refused to comply with a decision of such Board of Arbitration; and (b) the maximum amount (not exceeding that specified in the arbitration clause) which each distributor may demand as security pursuant to such clause.

2. Upon receipt of such information, the Secretary of each such Film Board of Trade shall advise all members of such Film Board of Trade for their exclusive and confidential information (a) of the name and address of every exhibitor who shall have been found by a Board of Arbitration (1) to have refused to submit to arbitration a controversy arising under a contract containing the arbitration clause, or (2) to have refused to comply with a decision of such Board of Arbitration, and (b) of the sum which such Arbitration Board has fixed as the maximum amount which distributors may demand as security from such exhibitor.

3. Subject to the provision of Rule II, on receipt of any such notice, each member having a contract (or representing a distributor having a contract) containing the arbitration clause with any such exhibitor shall demand payment by such exhibitor of such sum as in the judgment of such member or distributor shall be sufficient to protect such member or distributor in the performance of each contract with such exhibitor. Said sum shall not exceed the actual value of any print thereafter to be delivered under each such contract plus the rental contracted to be paid therefor, and in no case shall exceed the maximum amount fixed by the board of arbitration as aforesaid. Thereafter each distributor (represented in the membership) to whom such exhibitor shall have failed within seven (7) days to pay the amount of security so demanded by such distributor shall proceed to suspend service under each such contract until such exhibitor shall have furnished such security or complied with the decision of such Arbitration Board. If service under any such contract shall be so suspended for a period of ten days such contract, at the option of the distributor, may then be canceled. No member or distributor having so suspended service under any such contract with such exhibitor shall thereafter resume service under any such contract unless and until such exhibitor shall have furnished said security to such member or distributor or shall have complied with the decision of the Arbitration Board. Upon the happening of either of such events service under such contract shall be promptly resumed by such member or distributor.

4. In case either party to a dispute or a controversy arising under a Standard Exhibition Contract submitted to the Board of Arbitration shall claim that a right or liability, under the same or another Standard Ehibit Contract, exists or may exist (because of the facts involved in such controversy) against or in favor of some other party, not then a party to the controversy but a party to a Standard Exhibition Contract with the distributor a party to such dispute or controversy, the Board of Arbitration on application of either party shall, by written notice to such effect, make such other party a party to the controversy, and an award, if made in favor of or against such other party, may be enforced as provided in these rules.

5. The Secretary of the Board of Arbitration shall from time to time notify the secretaries of the Film Boards of Trade specified in paragraph 1 of this Rule IV in writing of the name and address of each exhibitor previously found by the Board of Arbitration to have committee one or more of the acts specified in paragraph 1 of this Rule IV, who shall thereafter have submitted to arbitration, or shall have complied with the decision of the Board of Arbitration. Upon receipt of any such information the secretaries of the said Film Boards of Trade shall forthwith advise in writing all members of said Film Boards of Trade for their exclusive and confidential information of the name and address of every such exhibitor, and thereupon each member or distributor having suspended service under any such contract with such exhibitor (as provided in paragraph 3 of this Rule IV) shall resume service thereunder.

:: "The Check-Up" ::

"The Check-Up" is a presentation in the briefest and most convenient form of reports received from exhibitors in every part of the country on current features, which makes it possible for the exhibitor to see what the picture has done for other theatre managers.

The first column following the name of the feature represents the number of managers that have reported the picture as "Poor." The second column gives the number who consider it "Fair"; the third, the number who consider it "Good"; and the fourth column, those who consider it "Big."

The fifth column is a percentage figure giving the average rating on that feature, obtained by the following method: A report of "Poor" is rated at 20%; one of "Fair," 40%; "Good," 70%; and "Big," 100%. The percentage ratings of all of these reports on one picture are then added together, and divided by the number of reports, giving the average percentage—a figure which represents the consensus of opinion on that picture. In this way exceptional cases, reports which might be misleading taken alone and such individual differences of opinion are averaged up and eliminated.

No picture is included in the list which has not received at least ten reports.

Conduct Statewide Drive

Harmonica Players of Texas to Compete in Contest for Hohner-Educational Prizes—Finals in Dallas

THOUGH it has already exceeded by far the length of life of the usual motion picture-merchant tie-up on a national basis, the Educational and Hohner company cooperative exploitation based on theatre harmonica contests appears to be at the peak of its popularity. Two campaigns of outstanding merit now are being promoted throughout the state of Texas and in the city of Seattle in honor of "Big Boy," Educational's comedy star. The events are elaborations of the long familiar Juvenile Comedies-Hohner Harmonica Playing Contest idea.

Three of the largest theatre circuits in Texas—Dent Theatres, Inc., R. & R. Theatres, Inc., and The Jefferson Amusement Co.—and a number of independent houses, making a grand total of sixty theatres, are co-operating in conducting the state-wide harmonica contest, under the leadership of L. H. Grandjean of the Dent organization, assisted by F. A. Tomes, manager of Educational's Dallas branch.

In Seattle, the harmonica contests are being conducted over an entire city-wide circuit of neighborhood houses comprising eleven theatres of the Northwestern Theatrical Enterprises, Inc., (two of them being outside Seattle), with a final contest to be held in a big downtown first run thetare. B. W. Rucker, manager of Educational's Seattle branch, is co-operating with this circuit in staging the contests.

The Texas campaign will start with each theatre selecting, by a series of elimination contests, the outstanding harmonica player of its district. This winner will be sent to Dallas at the theatre's expense to take part in the Grand Final contest for the State Championship. The winner will receive, in addition to the glory, a Gold Medal commemorative of the event and a musical instrument to the type he or she most prefers.

Accessories such as one sheet posters, window cards, stills, newspaper mats, slides and trailers are being supplied to the theatre free of cost. Cooperation has already been solicited from the Managing Editors of newspapers throughout the state, Chamber of Commerce secretaries and the Mayors of all the participating towns.

The contests are to start on or about April 9, and will carry through locally until May 31. All the winners will then proceed to Dallas the first week of June for the state finals. The formation of local Harmonica Bands will also be encouraged.

In addition to the cooperation which Educational is extending towards the success of the Texas competitions there is also another factor at work which will also mean considerable to all concerned. M. Hohner, Inc., will make a special drive through their Texas distributors, on all their merchant customers for cooperation in the nature of valuable window display and newspaper advertising space.

Elaborate Program to Feature Anniversary Week at Roxy

WHAT promises to be one of the most elaborate programs ever offered patrons of a motion picture theatre will be presented as an anniversary week bill at the Roxy theatre in New York. The new records for theatre receipts, established by the Roxy during the past year, are to be capped by a record-breaking bill supplementing the feature screen presentations.

During the year just closing, the Roxy piled up attendance figures probably never before equalled in theatre history. Approximately six and one half million people —more than the population of the city of New York—have passed through the doors of the big playhouse since its opening in March 1927. The record for a week's receipts was established during the first presentation at popular prices of "What Price Glory," when the returns totaled $144,267.30. The attendance that week was 176,266 persons. The record for a day's receipts was established on Washington's Birthday last, when $29,463 was taken in at the box office and 31,000 people were accommodated during the day.

For the celebration program, which opens Saturday March 10, S. L. Rothafel has augmented the regular cast of stage performers and vocalists with 100 additional members to the chorus, the ballet, and the ensemble. Joyce Coles has been engaged as the premiere danseuse. She will share a number with The Adaire Twins, who will do a mirror dance, in which the sisters, dancing in unison, give the effect of one moving figure and a mirrored reflection. Renoff and Renova have also been engaged for an adagio dance and other activities of the "Anniversary Revels." The services of Rose and Arthur Boylan, eccentric dancers, have been enlisted for an original dance.

Mr. Rothafel has also arranged to show the Chenko Novelty Skirt as a part of the festivities. This will be the first showing anywhere of the novel creation, brought over from Paris, and constructed in such a way that eight complete transformations can be effected without a change of costume. This garment, which was created, designed and executed by Leo Chenko, famous European dancer.

MANAGER BLAT of the Avon theatre, Philadelphia, has equipped that house with a loud speaker system which enables him to make announcements from his office to patrons of the theatre and the dance hall which is operated in conjunction with the playhouse. Loud speakers have been installed in the auditorium and dance hall with connecting wires to his office, where a combination phonograph and radio receiver is located. When occasion demands, news events of immediate interest which are broadcast from radio stations are tuned into these speakers. The arrangement also permits him to address his patrons and interpolate descriptions of scenes, such as prize fight sequences, in the pictures.

F. J. MILLER, manager of the Modjeska theatre, Augusta, Ga., achieved the "two birds with one stone" goal recently in exploiting his showing of "On Your Toes" and a subsequent boxing match between Stribling and Lucky, the latter a doorman at the Modjeska and an aspirant for fame in the squared circle. Lucky and a sparring mate ballyhooed the picture and the forthcoming boxing match by putting on some boxing exhibitions in a peripatetic ring, mounted on a small motor truck and trundled about the town. The ring was plastered with banners advertising "On Your Toes" and the Stribling-Lucky contest.

A "JUVENILE FOLLIES" stage show, with principals and chorus recruited entirely from the ranks of local talent, will be produced at the Roth-Strand theatre in Summit, N. J. The selection of talent for the show is being conducted through a series of "ability tests" put on every Saturday afternoon at the theatre. The grand final contest will be held March 31, when the selected members of the company will start rehearsals for the Follies. The local merchants are co-operating with I. A. Roth, executive manager, and Leon Mumford, director of amusement and publicity, of the Roth-Strand. Throwaway cards, program and newspaper advertising are developing interest in the event.

A GROUP of independent exhibitors of Winnipeg, Manitoba, is carrying out various co-operative business arrangements, including co-operative newspaper advertising under the name of "Allied Theatres," the president of which is Jacob Miles, proprietor of the Palace Theatre, Selkirk Avenue and Powers Street. Others include the Garden, Plaza and Rose theatres.

AN ESSAY contest was arranged by Junior McGeehan, publicity representative of Loew's Incorporated, in Baltimore, between the Baltimore Daily Post and Loew's Century. School children were invited to enter essays of 200 words or less in the contest on the subject: "What Lesson Does 'Old Ironsides' Teach America?" This was done to promote interest in the film "Oold Ironsides" which was shown at Loew's Century.

MANAGER A. M. ROY relied almost wholly on music to advertise "The Student Prince" at the Tampa theatre, Tampa, Fla. During the three days previous to play date, the orchestra played as the overture a medley of the song hits from "The Student Prince."

He became a theatre manager at the age of nineteen. He was among the first to realize that the motion picture could be presented on a scale superior to the "nickelodeon" style and was responsible for many innovations and refinements in the theatre which are now general practice. As vice president of Publix Theatres he started the first Theatre Manager's Training School, and now heads one of the largest chains of motion picture houses in America.

The book presents an analysis and exposition of the details of theatre management—functions and procedure—based on practical experience. Its purpose is to give guidance and advice drawn from reality to the experienced manager facing old problems appearing in a new application as a result of expanding responsibilities and activities, and present a vast array of miscellaneous fact in orderly, concise form for ready reference and practical information.

France Set for Film War

Will Use Reprisals Where Other Countries Ban French Films or Treat Them Unfairly

A MOVEMENT is on foot in France that threatens a film war between that country and other countries that do not cooperate with it in the matter of just treatment of foreign films, according to M. Herriot, Minister of Education and a prime mover in the enactment of the quota. He declares that if the French pictures are banned in other countries or are not given fair treatment, the French Government will use reprisals.

The London Times, quoting Herriott, says:

"The Kinema was born in France and it ought to conquer the world as did the French stage. The government has instituted a policy to favor and encourage our film industry. Without having recourse to a percentage of foreign films which are to be authorized in France, the film commission will have its hands free and will grant preference to French films so as to compete on equal terms with those foreign countries which employ protective weapons.

"The commission will keep a close watch upon the manner in which French films are treated abroad, and in granting permits to foreign films to show their films in France it will take into account the manner in which French films are welcomed abroad. If French films are banned in other countries or do not get fair treatment we may use reprisals."

With the product of American producers dominating the foreign field it is likely that the reception of foreign films and the treatment accorded them in this country will be watched closely by the French authorities. Just what attitude the American producers and distributors will take under the circumstances is being awaited with interest in the foreign market.

FBO Studios Will Not Shutdown

A REPORT published last week in one of the trade journals to the effect that the F B O studio would close down until June 1 was proclaimed a rumor by William Le Baron, vice-president of F B O in charge of production.

"We are working at top speed," said Mr. Le Baron, "with six companies at the studios and at locations throughout California. We will continue to operate with even greater activity during this month and the next, as soon as all our plans for the 1928-29 program have been completed."

Laemmle Has No Intention of Selling "Show Boat"

Carl Laemmle vigorously denies any intention of selling the motion picture rights to Edna Ferber's novel, "Show Boat," which he purchased a few months ago for $65,000. Universal plans to transfer it to the screen as a special production for next year with Harry Pollard in charge of its making. Pollard is working on preliminary plans now, Mr. Laemmle's statement reveals.

In and Out of Town

ALBERT WARNER, vice-president of Warner Bros., has booked passage for himself and wife to sail for Europe April 4 on the S. S. Berengaria. His trip will be a business mission to investigate the present demands of the Continental film market. He expects to be gone from New York for about two months.

I. E. CHADWICK, producer for First Division Distributors, Inc., is on his way back to Hollywood after a stay of two weeks in New York. His next production will be "The Miracle Girl," starring Betty Compson.

JESSE J. GOLDBURG, president of First Division Distributors, Inc., has also embarked for Hollywood to supervise the new production plant of his company at the Metropolitan studios.

EXHIBITORS from out-of-town who last week visited Sam E. Morris, general manager of distribution for Warner Bros., at the new office of Warner Bros. in New York City, were Real Neth, manager of the Grand Theatre in Columbus, Ohio, and Frank Rogers, of the E. J. Sparks circuit, Florida.

BUDD ROGERS, vice-president of Lumas Film Corporation, is now visiting the Gotham studio on the coast. He will remain there for several weeks observing conditions at the studios preparatory to launching his firm's product for the new season.

4 Productions Go Into Burbank Cutting Rooms

Last week four new First National films were completed at the studios at Burbank. They were "Lilac Time," "The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come," "Harold Teen," and "Chinatown Charlie." They are now in the hands of the cutters and editors.

The final scenes of the Colleen Moore picture were shot on Washington's Birthday by Director Fitzmaurice. A day later Alfred Santell completed the Richard Barthelmess vehicle. About the same time Mervyn LeRoy turned "Harold Teen" over to the cutters. Director Charles Hines and Producer C. C. Burr finished "Chinatown Charlie" late in February.

Columbia Acquires Loos-Emerson Stage Play

"The Fall of Eve," a play written by the team of Anita Loos-John Emerson, will be filmed by Columbia Pictures, who have just acquired the screen rights to the three-act comedy. The play had a run on Broadway and in California and is the last play of the Loos-Emerson team, excepting "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes." Columbia plans to present it next season.

"Square Crooks" Will Be Issued by Fox March 4

March 4 has been set as the release date for "Square Crooks," the Fox Films comedy drama directed by Lew Seiler, and featuring Johnny Mack Brown, Dorothy Dwan, Robert Armstrong and Dorothy Appleby.

Key City Reports

New York City

THE old saying that "what goes up must come down" can be applied to the seven days following the splendid showing Broadway houses made during Washington's Birthday week. There might be a number of reasons advanced for the decided fall in gross but the Lenten season and lack of real strong pulling power of pictures in some theatres were mainly responsible for the drop.

Probably the one picture that stood out among the popular priced houses was "Chicago" at the Strand, which did a much better than average week in the face of the depression along the street. It was held over for another week.

"The Latest from Paris" at the Capitol could not hold up to the good returns it reaped last Saturday and Sunday and eased off to below average results for the remainder of its stay. The Paramount, while making a fair showing with "Feel My Pulse," went considerably under its usual weekly average. The Roxy made but little profit with "Soft Living" after coming back strong the previous week. The next few weeks at the Roxy will undoubtedly show up much better as the house will splurge on an anniversary week and a booking of "The Jazz Singer" is to follow.

Although Warner Bros. claim that "The Jazz Singer" is still doing capacity business this picture will be pulled out March 11 to make way for "Tenderloin," starring Dolores Costello. Vitaphone will accompany this production. "The Jazz Singer" terminates a highly successful six months' run in this city.

The Colony also felt the slump with even a good old thriller, "The Leopard Lady." This house is one of the few along Broadway where a picture show without a lot of fancy trimmings can be seen and the management is doing everything possible to put it over; but it seems that an occasional outstanding picture plus a good orchestra and surrounding program is not enough to overcome the handicap of an out-of-the-way location.

After an excellent five weeks' showing "Sadie Thompson" will leave the Rivoli and be followed by "The Gaucho," March 10. "Sadie's" first month secured a return of $149,849 and the fourth week's figures were $24,047. All in all, fine business.

Among the leaders for honors in the $2 class are "Wings," "Four Sons," "The Crowd" and "Simba." Paramount's aviation special is still doing a fine business, thanks to the excellency of the production and the widespread interest in flying. "Four Sons" stood up strongly in spite of the lull and returns for "The Crowd" demonstrated that M-G-M's shift of this picture from the Capitol to the Astor was a wise move. A Lindbergh picture is also being shown here. At the Earl Carroll, "Simba" continues to prove that a good animal picture is a welcome diversion from the usual run of picture material.

The Central continues with "Uncle Tom's Cabin" to fair returns and the Cameo will wind up with its run of the British film "The Battles of Falkland and Coronel Islands." The latter has brought very satisfactory trade to the Cameo.

The Embassy with "Love" went through the week but it too felt the falling off to some extent and the same can be said for "The Last Command" at the Rialto. Griffith's "Drums of Love" ended its run at the Liberty. "Peaches" Browning swelled the receipts at the Hippodrome, the feature picture being "Sailors' Wives."

The Globe ushered in Fox's "Mother Machree" and Movietone and comment has it that this picture, with its generous helping of real m. p. hokum, is in for a good run.

Chicago

THE second week of "The Circus" at United Artists Theatre set a new box office record for this house and was the outstanding feature of loop attendance, crowds being larger than those during the first week of this picture's showing. Norma Shearer in "The Latest from Paris" on the screen and a stage show, "Treasure Ships," went over well at the Chicago theatre, while at the Oriental, "Feel My Pulse" as its screen feature and Paul Ash and his Gang in "Arabian Nights," played to good business.

The closing week of "Les Miserables" at the Roosevelt was somewhat off, while at McVickers "The Student Prince" continued to do good business.

"The Noose" was the screen attraction at the Uptown theatre, where business was slightly better than average. The Granada and Marbro theatres both offered "The Tragedy of Youth" as their screen features and both houses had elaborate stage shows, that at the former headed by Charles Kaley and his stage band and at the latter by Benny Meroff and James Barton in person, a fair box office record being made.

The seventh anniversary celebration at the Tivoli, which included in its program Richard Dix in "Sporting Goods" and the return of Benny Kreuger as well as Rae Samuels in person, pulled well and a big business was recorded. The Avalon's screen feature was "Across the Atlantic," and on the stage Roy Dietrich and his band, plus a Vitaphone specialty, "Solomon's Children," the bill drawing well. "Wife Savers" on the screen, with the usual big stage show and Vitaphone, did average business at the Capitol.

Philadelphia

BUSINESS in general was good last week. The Stanley, featuring Gloria Swanson, in "Sadie Thompson," with a group of stage presentations gathered under the heading of "Down on the Farm," including an unusual scarecrow dance on stilts, had a good week.

The Fox, with John Gilbert in a reissue of "Truxton King," supplemented by Mitti and Tillio in a sensational dance, "A Dream of Absinthe;" also Sara and Nellie Kouns, and Charles Rozella, did not do quite so well.

Charlie Chaplin in his latest success, "The Circus," drew good crowds at the Karlton this week.

The Carman with "The Warning" as the feature film and Guy and Pearl Magley and their band heading the presentation acts, reports good business.

"The Patent Leather Kid" will be withdrawn from the Erlanger, to be followed by "She Stoops to Conquer," with an all-star cast.

"Sunrise" wil be withdrawn from the Fox-Locust, to be followed by "Four Sons."

"Sorrell and Son" proved a good drawing card at the Palace.

"Wings" is stil going strong at the Aldine.

Los Angeles

"SADIE THOMPSON" which opened Wednesday at United Artists did better the last of the week than "Sorrell and Son" the first half.

"Gentlemen Prefer Blondes" drew excellent patronage at the Million Dollar. "Feel My Pulse" ran to good business at Loew's State while "Chicago" at the Metropolitan played to very fine audiences.

"The Jazz Singer" wound up a very successful engagement of nearly three months at the Criterion and was followed by "The Patent Leather Kid," which opened Wednesday night in a blaze of lights, stars and tourists. The picture was warmly received the remainder of the week and is due for a successful run.

"Wings," in its seventh week at the Biltmore, has drawn over 120,000 people during its highly successful run. "Four Sons" out at Carthay Circle succeeded in drawing good houses the past week.

Complete sell-outs at Grauman's Chinese showing "The Circus" is a daily occurrence. "Ballyhoo," the prologue, presents world-famous stars of the sawdust ring in an indoor circus of proportions.

Milwaukee

DESPITE the fact that the Lenten season is well launched, Milwaukee theatres did very good business throughout last week. The extremely cold weather at the beginning of the week slowed up things somewhat, but patronage picked up and kept up.

"Sorrell and Son" continued to draw very satisfying houses at the Garden in its second week down town; in fact, the patronage it drew indicated that it might have been shown successfully for a week or two more. "Baby Mine" at the Merrill was a very popular picture and did good business. The local papers carried more than the usual advertising of "Baby Mine," which, to some extent, accounted for its popularity. Greta Garbo in the "Divine Woman" at the Wisconsin was very well attended. "Flying Romeos" drew fair patronage to the Strand. "That's My Daddy" was moderately well attended at the Alhambra.

Neighborhood theatres, too, enjoyed an unexpectedly good week. "Wife Savers" played to good houses at the Oriental. "Man Crazy" was very popular at the Garfield and Uptown theatres. "Honeymoon Hate" was well received at the Venetian. "Midnight Rose" was only fairly well attended at the Egyptian.

Des Moines

AT THE Des Moines theatre "The Gaucho" did very nice business last week though hardly as much as was planned for it. The audiences liked it although the flappers thought that it was quite religious. Audiences in general are well pleased, with all ages attracted by this film. At the Capitol "The Latest from Paris" won much favorable comment and Norma Shearer is making firm friends with such pictures. The real attraction at the Capitol, however, is Jimmy Elland and the stage show. At the Strand theatre "Quality Street" was not very well liked. The young folks made fun of it but here and there there were patrons who urged their friends to come to see it as something really worth while. "Coney Island" did pretty fair business. However, business at the Strand always averages about the same. It is always good.

Pittsburgh

ALL attention was centered on the new Stanley which opened Monday. "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes" was the feature and a poor choice as people panned it and it got around town that the show was not up to standard. House did capacity, due to newness, although not holding out any people at any time. Anatole Friedland Reveu and Phil Spitalny held up the stage part of the show nicely. At the Penn Greta Garbo in "The Divine Woman" and stage show "Joy Bells" shaped up as one of the best shows house has held and business did not suffer at all. The Penn has been playing all the M. G. M. Specials and United Artists pictures coupled with stage shows and name acts as Whiteman, Sousa, Gertrude Ederle, Ted Weems, Ruth Elder, etc., have firmly instilled the fact that a good show may always be seen at the Penn, making opposition difficult to affect the steady clientele which the big house has built. Both the Penn and Stanley charge the same prices. All the other houses were affected by the new opening, though. Aldine, playing "Quality Street," a Marion Davies starring vehicle, got the backing of the Hearst paper, but business was 35 per cent off normal; the Davis with "Love and Learn" and vaudeville also off that percentage. Grand reverted to a straight picture house with orchestra, same prices prevailing, played "East Side, West Side" doing fair.

Neighborhood houses report poorest business in years for this time of the year.

Al Jolson in third week at the Olympic "Jazz Singer" and "Cohens and Kellys in Paris" at Cameo in fourth week also suffered.

This week an adjustment should take place that will decide how business will be for the future after the newness of the Stanley wears off.

Keen competition at that next week, Gilda Gray in person and on screen in "Devil Dancer" at the Stanley, and the Penn will play Chaplin in "The Circus" and Pat Rooney will head a stage show.

Seattle

ANOTHER week of average business for the local houses, with no great box office triumphs and no dismal flops.

The Fifth Avenue theatre offered as its screen fare "A Gentleman of Paris," and the suave Adolphe Menjou walked through the film with much pleasing comment from the audiences. It was a typical Menjou film, very well liked by most of the patrons, and good for a strong week's business. Fanchon-Marco's "Folliettes Idea" on the stage was rather weak. Altogether a good week.

At the United Artists theatre, Manager Perutz's second week engagement of "The Student Prince" continued to attract very pleasing houses, after an opening week that ran into big money at the box office. The film was well liked, the musical score was fine, and altogether the two weeks' engagement brought very big business to the theatre.

The Columbia, with "Surrender," played to average good houses. The film was decidedly heavy, with limited audience appeal, and also had to buck the house's advance advertising on "The Circus," booked for the following week. But a strong supporting program and an excellent musical selection by Francesco Longo and the Columbia Orchestra added decidedly to the gross.

The Blue Mouse theatre offered "Good Time Charley" as the screen attraction, with the usual run of Vitaphone shorts and Movietone News. The feature was fairly well liked, but as usual the supporting program added decidedly to the pulling power of the show. Business held up to the ordinary high average, with waiting lines each night.

At the Orpheum theatre, "Bare Knees" was the screen feature, and was hardly considered a successful film. In conjunction with the best vaudeville program in many weeks, however, it did a very pleasing business, quite a bit above the average week at this house. Box office report was strong, due to the stage show and not the film.

"The Little Adventuress" on the screen at Pantages was a weak program attraction, used in conjunction with a strong vaudeville program headlined by the Duncan Sisters in person. The girls were advertised as the highest salaried act in vaudeville, and managed to pack the house to capacity at all times, piling up one of the biggest grosses in the history of the house during recent years. The film, rightly, was merely an incidental part of the show. Week's business very big—far above average.

Minneapolis

THERE were two outstanding film attractions shown in Minneapolis the past week. One of these was "Sorrell and Son," which did a fine business at the Strand and had to hold over for a second week. The other was "Two Arabian Knights," with Louis Wolheim and William Boyd, which showed at Pantages. The Pan exploited this picture excellently, and it rewarded the theatre with bang up crowds. The picture was shown under the Hennepin county council of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, and this helped out immensely, as the veterans were pushing it all week. Wallace Beery and Raymond Hatton in "Wife Savers" pulled in nice crowds at the State, although they were not the only attraction, as Singers Midgets royal jazz band was on the program, and this helped considerably, especially as far as the children were concerned. "The Cohens and Kellys in Paris did about the average business at the Garrick, and "West Point" came into the Grand for a second run showing and once more proved itself a first rate box office attraction.

Rod La Rocque in "Stand and Deliver" was the picture at the Hennepin-Orpheum, which inaugurated its three-a-day policy last week. The theatre advertised this film as "one of the season's biggest photoplays, and it did, indeed, prove a very nice addition to the program. The Seventh Street theatre showed Frankie Darro in "Little Mickey Grogan."

The neighborhood houses reported about the average business. Films shown at the principal outlying theatres included "The Gay Defender" at the Lagoon, "College" at the Lyndale. "Lovelorn" at the Loring, and "Tell It to Sweeney" at the Rialto.

Tampa

THE way things opened up Sunday it looked as though the Franklin was going to break the house record with "The Circus." The opening was pretty close to a record, but an all day rain Monday, followed by three chilly days, put a crimp into receipts. However, the house had a big week on this film at 50c. prices.

"The Patent Leather Kid," featured by the Tampa for the first half, was an excellent card. Sunday went over big and but for the inclement weather the following three days this picture would have crowded the house record. "Feel My Pulse" was featured for the last half and it did very good.

The Victory registered another good week with "The Fortune Hunter" and other Vitaphone presentations. Prices reduced to 60c. at night brought out enough extra business to keep the gross up nicely.

The Strand suffered from the big draws against them and the receipts for the week were under the average. The pictures featured were "Night Life," "The Rush Hour" and "Baby Mine."

Cleveland

THE big business of the week went to hold-overs.

"The Devil Dancer" came for its share of popularity, and the other pictures just did fair business.

"The Jazz Singer," going into its fifth week at the Stillman, continues to play to capacity business. This picture has the whole town going to see it, not once, but over again. "The Circus" continues to hold a front place at the Cameo theatre, where it is going into its third week, after having played a first run of one week at the State. "The Devil Dancer" did capacity business at the State last week, but whether it was the picture alone or the personal appearance of Gilda Gray, or a happy combination of both, it is hard to say. Anyhow, the box office made a fine showing, and that's the principal thing.

"Gentlemen Prefer Blondes" didn't go over so big at the Allen for no good reason at all. It was well exploited, and extensively advertised, but it just failed to click with the crowds. Keith's Palace had a good week, but nothing extraordinary, with "The Cohens and the Kellys in Paris," good comedy picture, but the theme seems to be worn out with the general public. Reade's Hippodrome had just fair business last week with "The Pioneer Scout," good western stuff, as the feature attraction the first half of the week, and "Freckles," also an action picture, as the attraction the last half of the week. "Open Range" pleased the western fans at Keith's East 105th Street theatre.

Legitimate theatre competition was not particularly keen last week.

Portland, Ore.

BUSINESS was of an improved nature at the local theatres, with the West Coast Broadway and Pantages being the leaders of the week. Pantages registered a record week with the personal appearance of the Duncan Sisters and George Lipschultz, a big local card, who gave a few solos on his violin. "Thanks for the Buggy Ride" was the film offering. The Broadway boasted of "Serenade" with Adolphe Menjou, and the Eight Victor Artists. Tebbett's Oriental went to fair returns with F. B. O.'s "Not for Publication." Picture seemed to lack the punch, although it got the house over to a good break.

The Liberty improved its gross with Gene Dennis's appearance in her second week. The girl psychic pulled the house from the "red." Picture was "Honeymoon Hate."

The Columbia did not connect with "The Circus" as big as expected. Keen competition might have been responsible.

Birmingham

BUSINESS in Birmingham on the whole was good last week.

The Alabama, with Norma Talmadge in "The Dove" had a fair week.

Janet Gaynor in "Seventh Heaven" brought an avalanche of criticisms and good houses to the Ritz, playing the second time in Birmingham, but the first time with Movietone. Audiences will not forget this picture in a long time.

Loew's Temple with "The Enemy," starring Lillian Gish, reports good business.

The Strand, departing from custom, put on a double bill, first half being William Boyd in "The Night Flyer," and last half "Love and Learn," with Esther Ralston, but business did not come up to standard.

"Jesse James, Jr." brought good houses to the Galax the last half of the week.

George O'Brien in "Honor First" drew only fair business to the Trianon.

Harrisburg

THE cream of last week's business in Harrisburg was gathered at Loew's Regent theatre, where Charlie Chaplin in "The Circus," proved a tremendous hit from the hop-off on Monday and gained strength as the week progressed.

Indeed the success of the Chaplin picture detracted somewhat from the business of the other downstown first run houses. It was noted particularly that fewer children than usual attended the other shows and the explanation was that they flocked in larger numbers to "The Circus."

Notwithstanding this, quite fair business was done at the Victoria, where the feature film was "Feel My Pulse, with Bebe Daniels. It was the first full week that the big new Marr & Colton organ was in operation at the "Vic," and this fact undoubtedly attracted many additional patrons.

At the Colonial the Al Jolson picture, "The Jazz Singer," which had been held over from the previous week, did not hold up as well as was expected. It is seldom that film plays venture upon a second week's showing in Harrisburg and when they do they must have exceptional merit to be able to draw some of the same patrons a second time. "The Jazz Singer" could not draw enough repeaters to justify fully the extension of its stay, although in its first week it did splendid business. The fact that the Ortho-Voca-Phone was used instead of a Vitaphone for the syncronization of the music with the Jolson picture detracted somewhat from the musical part of the program.

Madge Bellamy in "Silk Legs" proved a good attraction at the State the last half of the week. The Broad street offered Jack Holt and Dorothy Revier in "The Warning," a thriller that went big. Tom Mix with Dorothy Dwan proved popular in "Tumbling River," at the Russell.

Boston

THE first full week since the advent of Lent has shown the unexpected for Boston and suburban theatres, for it has brought about two instances of box office records being broken and one of the best week's business in years.

"Wings," Paramount's road show, is entering its final week. The dozen weeks' run at the Tremont theatre has broken records for any similar period of any Boston road show although other films have had much longer runs.

"The Patent Leather Kid" is credited with establishing a new box office record at the Strand Malden as well as the Strand in Providence. It held over for a second week at the Fenway theatre in Boston, one of the first run houses that on only two former occasions has held over a show. It also reached the high water mark at the Washington Street Olympia during the week.

Another film which is to be held over for another week is "The Jazz Singer" at the Modern and Beacon theatres. This is being shown with Vitaphone accompaniment. This is the first time in the history of both of these twin theatres that a film has been shown for three consecutive weeks in both houses simultaneously.

Gene Rodemich returned to the Metropolitan to direct the musical numbers and lead the presentations last week. He has been guest conductor around a circuit of the big eastern cities. He received an ovation on his return. "The Private Life of Helen of Troy" is the film feature and in spite of the length of its title it proved one of the biggest drawing cards for the Metropolitan in months. The Metropolitan would be perfectly content to gross this week's figures every week in the year.

"The Divine Woman" succeeds "Man, Woman and Sin" at Loew's State theatre and is playing to well nigh capacity houses. Jack Crawford and his Victor Recording Band is the stage attraction and the combination is good for another big week.

"Under the Tonto Rim" is the Keith-Albee feature, playing to one of the best week's grosses in several months.

Loew's Orpheum showed "The Gaucho" for a good week. "Blood Will Tell" and "Not For Publication" was the twin bill at the Howard for heavy grosses throughout the week. Other feature films showing good returns were "My Best Girl" at the Codman Square, "The Rush Hour" at the Capitol, "The Student Prince" at the Bowdoin Square, "French Dressing" at the Fields Corner, "Hero for a Night" at the Allston and "Blondes by Choice" at the Strand.

Albany

THERE was no let up in good business last week at all of Albany's first run motion picture theatres, the managers and owners reporting business as being very satisfactory. For instance the Leland theatre played to standing room night after night with Lon Chaney's "London After Midnight." At the Mark Ritz, Buster Keaton in "College" went over big with both matinee and evening shows. The bill was well balanced.

At the Mark Strand, the biggest jam in weeks occurred on Thursday night, following several weeks of newspaper tie-up in connection with the showing of "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes." About twenty of Albany's prettiest blondes were found seated on the stage when the curtain was drawn aside and the judging started. It was one of the best pieces of exploitation that has been staged here in recent years. The picture itself held up well throughout the week.

At the Clinton Square theatre in Albany, where first run double features prevail, a Tom Mix picture entitled "Daredevil's Reward" and another feature "High School Hero" served to fill the house.

Business in the neighborhood houses was rather spotty during the week, some exhibitors being inclined to complain while others asserted that business was equal to a year ago this time.

In Troy, the Troy theatre played to smashing crowds with "The Jazz Singer," hundreds being turned away on Sunday night, unable to secure admission. The Lincoln theatre used "Love" to very satisfactory receipts at the box office.

Thus far there seems to be no falling off in business due to the Lenten season.

Dallas

TOM MIX in "Arizona Wildcat" did a fair business at the Majestic, but failed to keep business where it had been for the past several weeks. Miss Lee Morse, Columbia recording artist, headlined the vaudeville.

At the Melba, John Gilbert, in "Man, Woman and Sin," brought business down for the week," and gross for this week was low compared to that of last week when "West Point" was shown. However, the Melba's business since its opening as a Publix house is still on the safe side of the ledger.

"Finders Keepers," with Laura La Plante at the Capitol, had a good week, although business was not big. This picture was a Texas Blue Ribbon winner.

The Palace brought out the big crowds with Richard Dix in "Sporting Goods," and received many favorable comments on the picture. Ken Whitmer, the new stage band director, has been more than "well received."

"The Whip Woman," with Estelle Taylor, brought a good business to the Old Mill the past week. A Mack Sennett comedy and Paramount News was also shown.

The Arcadia, the de luxe suburban theatre of Dallas, marked up another good week with "Les Miserables," "The Gay Retreat," and "Spring Fever." A Vitaphone specialty is always included in the program.

San Francisco

LAST week's business was good at the several local motion picture theatres. This includes both first run and residential theatres.

"The Jazz Singer," at the Embassy Theatre, again was a big drawing card where it was shown a second week and will be held over for a third. All records have been broken by this Al Jolson picture at the Embassy Theatre, which seats a few over 1,600 persons, and with the close of the second week this picture played to $42,000 and 65,000 people. Arrangements are being made for "gala" nights here is the future.

"The Student Prince," drew many to the California theatre the second week, but the crowds were not as large as anticipated. Two reasons have been given for this, one being that the music was lacking, not being as good as it should be, and the other that people were disappointed in the plot, as it did not live up to the original one. All praised the acting, however.

The third week of "The Gaucho" with Douglas Fairbanks, at the St. Francis Theatre, held up exceptionally well, and it will be held over for a fourth week. The Granada Theatre filled its seats with the picture "French Dressing" and the Four Marx Brothers on the stage, and the Loew's Warfield Theatre reported big business with "Feel My Pulse," on the screen, and "Circus Days," as the presentation Act, a Fanchon and Marco "Idea."

The Golden Gate Theatre featured "The 13th Juror" with Anna Nilsson and Francis X. Bushman, and vaudeville acts, and reported very good business. The Union Square Theatre did remarkably well with "Shanghaied."

Atlanta

ATLANTA theatre box-offices enjoyed a good week with a close margin between the larger houses.

The Howard played Richard Dix in "Sporting Goods" to extra good houses all week. Next door Lon Chaney drew large audiences in "The Big City," an entertaining crook picture.

Janet Gaynor in "Two Girls Wanted" held a strong fortress at the Capitol, assisted by unusually good vaudeville headed by Neil O'Brien.

"My Best Girl" played at the Rialto to good houses. Mary Pickford is getting an appreciable reception by Atlanta audiences in her "come-back" picture.

Keith's Georgia with "Freckles," Gene-Stratton-Porter's story, also had a substantial week.

At the Tudor, three westerns brought a fair week. The Cameo had no first runs this week, but enjoyed good business as usual.

Kansas City

ATTENDANCE at practically all first run houses in Kansas City this week was just about on a par with last week, which was slightly under normal average.

Norma Talmadge in "The Dove" played to good crowds at Loew's Midland, which also can be said of Bebe Daniels in "Feel My Pulse" at the Newman.

John Gilbert in "Honor First" at the Pantages drew only fair crowds, as did "That Certain Thing" at the Liberty theatre. At the Mainstreet the picture, "Chicago," played to slightly better than average attendance. Al Jolson in "The Jazz Singer," which was a return engagement, held up fairly well throughout the week.

Aside from more than the usual newspaper advertising space on the part of the Mainstreet theatre, none of the pictures received anything out of the ordinary in exploitation.

Salt Lake City

DOWNTOWN theatre business has averaged fairly good this past week, with a few exceptionally good reports having been received.

Richard Dix in "Sporting Goods" played to capacity houses all week at the Capitol, in conjunction with the Fanchon and Marco Stage Idea, "Harvest Time," which was a very big drawing card, due to the fact that "The Royal Welch Gleemen" were featured.

The Paramount Empress Theatre did very well with their showing of "Sadie Thompson," Gloria Swanson's latest picture, it is reported.

George Bancroft in "The Showdown" was moderately well attended at the Victory Theatre.

The Gem did unusually well with the first-run showing of "Freckles," with Hobart Bosworth, John Fox and Gene Stratton.

Hobart Bosworth and Marion Nixon in "The Chinese Parrot" went over very satisfactorily at the American throughout the week.

The second showing of John Gilbert in "Man, Woman and Sin" did fairly well at the Rialto.

Emil Jannings in "The Way of All Flesh" was a big drawing card at the Mission suburban house here early in the week, and the Tower Theatre reports good business on "When a Man Loves," with John Barrymore and Dolores Costello.

Baltimore

THE loss of business to the first run moving picture theatres in Baltimore during the week beginning Monday, February 27, was very apparent, due to Lent, but despite that several houses had good patronage.

"Old Ironsides" proved a surprise at Loew's Century, where a good business was done, but this is attributed greatly to the number of schools that sent children to see the picture, from a historical standpoint.

"Broken Blossoms," the reissued version of the D. W. Griffith vehicle starring Richard Bathelmess and Lillian Gish, proved a good business getter at the Little theatre, a 250-seat house operated by the Motion Picture Guild, Inc.

"Two Flaming Youths," co-starring C. W. Fields and Chester Conklin, proved a good attraction at the Stanley, but the excellent attendance is credited a great deal to the appearance of Sophie Tucker and her son Bert.

"The Jazz Singer," starring Al Jolson, went over good during its eighth week at Warner's Metropolitan and it was held for a ninth week, which equals the run made here a few years ago by "Way Down East" at the old Lyceum theatre.

"The Rush Hour," featuring Marie Prevost and Harrison Ford, was the feature film attraction at the Palace theatre, where burlesque is given on the same bill on a grind policy. Attendance for the week was good.

The patronage at Keith's Hippodrome, where "The Red Raiders," starring Ken Maynard was the film attraction, was only fair, with five acts of family time Keith-Albee vaudeville. "The Leopard Lady" proved only a fair drawing card at Whitehurst's New theatre.

"The Enemy," with Lillian Gish, was considered somewhat of a flop during its run at Loew's Valencia, particularly during its second week. But business built up during the latter half of the second week, and this was attributed to the overflow from "Old Ironsides" downstairs at the Century in the same building.

"Silver Valley," starring Tom Mix, did not hit a responsive chord with the patrons of the Keith Albee New Garden, where eight acts of Keith-Albee vaudeville are shown also.

It is understood the management had to play that picture on account of certain bookings made, but the poor business there during the week is attributed somewhat to the return of a picture starring Mix, even though it was a good Mix picture.

Ottawa

REPEAT engagements were quite the thing in Ottawa, Ontario, during the week of February 27, and they were successful. Lent has not made a dent in patronage at Ottawa theatres, but a difference has been noted in Hull, Quebec, where French-Canadians predominate. The Hull theatres are playing up double bills and are otherwise tempting the crowds.

The Regent, Ottawa, had another big week with "The Big Parade," this being a come-back run. Crowds were good all week for the war film. The Imperial had the third local presentation of "Ben Hur," and another success was registered with fine attendance at every performance. It looked as if these two productions could be brought back any old time for a good box-office week.

Clara Bow cavorted through "My Lady of Whims" at B. F. Keith's. Big "optiences" —the latest word for a moving picture crowd—gathered at Keith's and enjoyed the film, but did not rave about it.

"Come to My House," starring Olive Borden at the Centre Theatre, proved a good program picture, but it suffered by comparison with some of the recent big features which have been seen at the Centre.

The Fern Theatre had an excellent picture in "When a Man Loves," starring John Barrymore, and the adult female patronage was far better than usual. Peter B. Kyne's "Breed of the Sea" was a strong drawing card at the Rex, this feature appealing to all ages with handsome box-office result. Good crowds were also in evidence at the Columbia Theatre for the presentation of "On Ze Boulevard," the names of the stars, Lew Cody and Renee Adoree, undoubtedly proving a big help.

In Hull, Quebec, the Laurier Theatre had a double bill, "Singed" and "A Flame in the Sky," which drew a little better than average. Practically the same result was achieved at the Eden Theatre for the double program comprising "Sweet Adeline" and "A Light in the Window." The Capitol Theatre, Hull, had fair attendance for its doubtlet, "Hook and Ladder" and "Half a Chance." The Capitol has been doing a little better in recent weeks under new management.

Studio Briefs

Another Tiffany-Stahl color film, the second to be started on the coast, is being made by Hans Reinhard with a cast made up of Duncan Renaldo, Joan Meredith, Jack Vanaire, Billy Seay, Mary Dow and Madam St. Pierre. The title of the two-reeler is "The Medallion."

Duke Kahanamoku, the famous Hawaiian swimmer, will have a part in Paramount's "Easy Come, Easy Go," as will also Christian J. Frank and Joseph J. Franz, character actors.

Another "old timer" in the screen firmament, Florence Turner, who years ago was known as "the Vitagraph Girl," will play the mother of Sue Carrol in the Pathe-De Mille production, "Walking Back." Others who have been given roles are Richard Walling, Ivan Lebedeff, Arthur Rankin, Jane Keckly, George Irving, Billy Sullivan and Georgie Stone.

Films of the underworld and its characters are to the fore at the present time. Tiffany-Stahl has filmed one and given it the title of "Nameless Men." Its former title was "The Clash." Antonio Moreno and Claire Windsor head the cast. Viola Brothers Shore and Harry Braxton have just finished the titles.

More writers have been added to the Columbia writing staff. Frederica Sagor has joined the company to do the adaptation of a new story and Fred Myton and Wyndham Gittens also have been engaged to prepare screen material.

Noble Johnson will have a featured role in Leo Maloney's new Western for Pathe. In this new production, "Yellow Contraband," Johnson will enact the part of a Chinese mandarin.

Herman Manckiewicz, Paramount title writer, is doing the titles for Night of Mystery," the new title of Adolpe Menjou's latest picture which Lothar Mendes directed.

First National plans to give "The Squall," the play which it recently acquired, an elaborate production with plenty of scenic backgrounds and a large cast.

Anne Nichols, author of "Abie's Irish Rose," has turned song writer. She is writing the lyrics for an "Abie" song, to be published simultaneously with the appearance of Paramount's screen version of her play. The music, a waltz, has been composed by J. S. Zamecnik.

Frank Tuttle, director, has signed a new long-time contract with Paramount. Hope Loring, scenarist, has also been signed.

Joseph Cawthorn, musical comedy personality, has an important part in "Hold 'Em, Yale."

Reginald Barker, producing "Power" for Tiffany-Stahl, will shoot several exterior sequences in the eastern part of the United States.

"The Big Noise," will be the title of the story Allan Dwan has been producing for First National under the titles of "The Headliner" and "Move On."

Thelma Todd has joined the large cast of "Abie's Irish Rose."

Martin Cohen will have complete charge of the editorial department of Tiffany-Stahl on the coast. He has been in the film production business for eight years.

Harold Lloyd is considering three ideas for pictures that will follow "Speedy," his latest for Paramount. The comedian is considering a collegiate comedy, a cub reporter story and a story of a mythical kingdom.

"Aching Youth" is the final title selected for Charley Chase's new comedy, produced by Hal Roach for M-G-M. Edna Marion, Eugene Pallette, May Wallace and others are in the cast; Fred Guiol directed.

Sport will supply the motif of another of Richard Dix's vehicles for Paramount. His next will be an original baseball story by Sam Mintz, entitled "Knocking Them Over." Fred Newmeyer is to direct.

Director Emory Johnson and Emilie Johnson, his mother, have joined the directorial and writing staffs of Tiffany-Stahl.

Robert McGowan is busily preparing a new story for "Our Gang," in which he expects to use all four winners of the recent west coast "Our Gang" talent hunt.

Marion Jackson, who writes and adapts Ken Maynard's stories and who also adapted and scenarized "The Shepherd of the Hills," has been re-signed by Charles R. Rogers.

Gail Lloyd will be a featured player in a series of two-reel comedies which Christie is producing for Paramount.

In addition to Charley Bowers, who is starred, "Whoozit," a new Educational-Bowers comedy, has a cast which includes Ted Lorch, Kewpie Morgan, Anne Brodie and Emily Gerdes.

"Quick Lunch," a new Paramount comedy, was started last week at the studio. The newest additions to the supporting cast include Martha Mattox, Eugene Pallette, Robert Dudley, Mary Alden, Arthur Housman and Sally Blane. Richard Arlen will not be cast in this picture.

Anthony Coldeway has finished the script of "The Desert Bride," which Columbia is filming. Will M. Tirchey is doing the continuity of a sea story. Armand Kaliz, actor and writer, is also at work on an original story. Byron Haskins, director, is writing a story as his next Columbia picture. Peter Milne is finishing the continuity of "The Matinee Idol."

Polly Moran, M-G-M comedienne, has been signed by Leo McCarey, supervising director and vice-president of the Hal Roach studio, to appear in support of Max Davidson in Roach's next two-reel feature of the star.

An original story, entitled "Why Announce your Marriage?," the work of Lewis Allen Brown and Allan Crosland, has been purchased by Universal, and John Clymer is now adapting it to the screen. It will be made into an all-star farce and will be directed by Edward Laemmle.

Herbert Brenon will make another picture for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, the story for which has not yet been definitely selected. Brenon is now about to cut his latest production, "Laugh, Clown, Laugh," starring Lon Chaney.

John Monk Saunders, author, and Hope Loring, scenarist, have both renewed their contracts with Paramount.

Lydia Yeamans Titus has an important comedy role in "Visitors Welcome," a new Educational-Tuxedo comedy.

Eileen Percy will have a leading role in William Haines' next for M-G-M, "He Learned About Women."

Estelle Bradley will play the role of a vamp in a new Educational-Mermaid comedy which Jules White is to direct.

Bebe Daniels has so far recovered from injuries which she received while filming a Paramount picture that she has resumed work with James Hall, her leading man.

The prize winners of the recent "Our Gang" talent hunt conducted over the West Coast theatre circuit were last week introduced to the members of Hal Roach's gang of juveniles. In the quartette are Jimmy Dick Farren, of Santa Ana, Calif.; "Big Bill" Ulmer, of Seattle; Bob Eugene Pearson, of Oakland, Calif., and Ben Parsons, of Portland, Ore.

Jackie Levine, who has been playing the kid heavy in "Big Boy's" Educational comedies of late, appears again in that light in "Chilly Days," the child star's latest comedy.

Eugene Pallette and Martha Mattox, character actors, have been added to the cast of the new Fields-Conklin picture which Charles "Chuck" Reisner is directing.

As soon as he completes "Show Boat" for Universal, Harry Pollard, director, will make another Cohen and Kelly comedy feature for Universal. Matt Taylor has been engaged to make an adaptation of a story built around the title "The Cohens and the Kellys in Turkey."

Jules Rancourt and Emile Chautard have joined the cast of "Super of the Gaiety," a new Paramount comedy.

Opinions on Pictures

The Rush Hour

Fairly Funny Farce Comedy

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

A SLIGHT farce comedy with some funny moments placed here and there along its thin stretch of story. It has the provocative Marie Prevost and the energetic Harrison Ford to enliven it and make it appear sprightly, for it often happens that the film just dodders along. It is a difficult matter to maintain a farce pace for five reels or more, to stretch a story to that length, especially when the idea is trifling in itself. Marie didn't have any "Up in Mable's Room" this time.

It's somewhat novel to have two women fighting a duel. After leaving her sweetie in America and galloping over to Europe via stowaway Marie gets entangled with a set of crooks, and is offered as bait to catch an oil millionaire from Oklahoma with more money than brains. This fellow can give her everything she wants, but little Marie's heart is elsewhere—with her sweetie back home.

The picture coasts along here with scenes at the Riviera but nothing much else. The American lover arrives in France seeking his girl and finds her fighting the duel with one of the crooks, who had accused her of stealing the affections of the other crook. The picture is half spent with weariness by the time the duel is over.

Drawing Power: Kind of weak for first run showings. Suitable for the average theatres. Exploitation Angles: The names of the star and her leading man. The title offers possibilities in the line of "rush" ballyhoos.

Produced by De Mille Picutres. Distributed by Pathe. Released, December, 1927. Length, 5,880 feet. The Cast: Marie Prevost, Harrison Ford, David Butler, Seena Owen, Ward Crane. Story by Frederic and Fanny Hatton. Scenarized by Zelda Sears and Fred Stanley. Director, E. Mason Hopper.

Sailors' Wives

Not Much Heft to This

(Reviewed by E. G. Johnston)

THE press book honestly admits that the title of this picture has nothing to do with sailors or their wives—and so do we; and so will Warner Fabian, the author of the book from which the picture was made. It's a symbolical title, you see; nothing to do with the matter of selling books or pictures. Now let's see what it's all about, and just what it has for exhibitors and the good old public.

Probably Mary Astor's name and her admirable efforts to make something out of the ordinary material is the best point you have to sell. Next comes the importance of Warner Fabian's reputation as a writer of doings among the more frivolous social elite. These points seem the outstanding ones; otherwise it's just another motion picture.

The theme is quite a beautiful one, and does much credit to the feminine sex. A boy and girl meet in Paris and fall in love. On the day of the wedding the boy receives a note from the girl telling him the ceremony is off. The reason for this is that the girl has found that it is merely a question of time when she will be totally blind. They both return to America; she to cram her life full of thrills and he, to mope about. To hide her real reason, the girl attempts to make her lover believe that she is fickle when they meet again. Discouraged at last, the girl attempts to end her life with a bullet. An operation restores her eyesight and her sweetheart.

Drawing Power: Not strong enough for first run, but will do for double feature or use with vaudeville. Exploitation Angles: Play up Mary Astor's name, others in cast and name of author. Don't mislead your patrons with title. Bill as society drama.

THEME: Romance between boy and girl halted by impending loss of sight by latter. Tries to impress boy with fact that she is fickle rather than reveal circumstances. Her attempt at suicide results in restoration of sight.

Produced and distributed by First National. Length, 5,485 feet. Released, Jan. 22, 1928. The Cast: Mary Astor, Lloyd Hughes, Earle Foxe, Burr McIntosh, Ruth Dwyer, Jack Mower, Olive Tell, Robert Schwable, Gayne Whitman and Bess True. From Warner Fabian's story and directed by Joseph Henabery.

The Law of Fear

A Real Good Dog Tale

(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

HERE we have a dog tale that is one of the best of the kind yet portrayed on the screen. Very melodramatic, and, of course, illogical for the most part; at the same time it keeps moving, and it should hold the interest of almost any audience from start to finish. Its main fault is its slowness in starting. The director takes up a lot of footage in driving home the affection of the dog mates, which, however, is a big factor in the development of the story.

Ranger is the dog-star, and he does his work impressively. He is called upon for all sorts of heroics, and he displays almost human intelligence. His battles with the horrible hunchback are most realistic, as he seems to display the real hatred that is called for in the role.

The cast is a small one, there being only three in support of the dog, and they all do their work well. The horribly grotesque makeup of Al Smith as the hunchback bandit is too exaggerated, but Smith gives a highly creditable performance. In fact it is so well done that it is almost a surprise when it is revealed that he is also Steven Benton, brother-in-law of the heroine. Jane Reid is seen to advantage as the heroine, and Sam Nelson is equally good as the sheriff and lover of Marion. Aside from a possible minor defect or two the direction by Jerome Storm is excellent, and the story remarkably well handled. He kept it as well within the bounds of reason as possible, which is unusual to these dog tales.

Drawing Power: Should do very well where they are partial to melodrama. It is one of the best of the type seen. Exploitation Angles: The heroic and intelligent actions of the dog-star; the terrific battles between the dog and hunchback bandit.

THEME: Dog-star avenges the killing of his mate by the bandit when he tracks the latter to his death, and he is then revealed as the scheming brother-in-law of the heroine.

Produced and distributed by F B O. Released, April 8, 1928. Length, 4,769 feet. The Cast: Ranger, Jane Reid, Sam Nelson, Al Smith. Directed by Jerome Storm. Story by William Francis Dugan.

Midnight Rose

Pretty Weak

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

A FILM story slipshod in its direction and weak in acting, this "Midnight Rose" is boring to the extreme. It is so bad that many of your patrons are liable to walk out while it is being shown. The producers tried to turn out a story of the underworld, one with plenty of pathos and the like, but they failed miserably in their object, and produced, instead, a puny piece of work. The unbiased critic can only say that it is "terrible"; he has no other choice.

Lya de Putti is starred in the role of a cabaret girl. If you remember her excellent work in "Variety" and then compare it with the sloppy acting she contributes here, you can realize how far she has dropped since her Ufa days. As "Midnight Rose" she is awkward, shambling and colorless. Playing opposite her is Kenneth Harlan, an ex-crook who tries to go straight; he, also, is ineffective. Old-fashioned, hammy postures seem to be the stock in trade of the entire cast.

The story, by J. Grubb Alexander, displays no originality, no brightness and is dull throughout. The direction by James Young is tedious and he commits the unpardonable sin of letting the actors actually mope through some of their scenes. Movie fans, as a rule, are patient folk, very patient. But we do not think they will swallow this stuff.

Drawing Power: Poor. Prop it up with some funny shorts or be sure to have a good accompanying feature that will relieve the tedium caused by this one. Exploitation Angles: See the press book.

THEME: Drama of the underworld, of a girl who marries an ex-crook trying to go straight, of how he and she fall into the power of the chief of the underworld and of how he relents and lets them go their way in peace.

Produced and distributed by Universal. Released, February, 1928. Length, 5,689 feet. The Cast: Lya de Putti, Kenneth Harlan, Henry Kolker, Lorrimer Johnston, George Larkin, "Gunboat" Smith, W. P. Franklin, Frank Brownlee. Director, James Young.

Gun Gospel

A Typical Maynard Western

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

THE old western formula is worked once again in this typically wild, shoot-'em up, ride-'em-hard Maynard western. The easily smiling Ken is pitted against a horde of villains, but, with debonair grace, he vanquishes them all. Never flustered, always the calm, cool young chap he can, in the face of overwhelming odds, save the gal and mete out punishment to the villainous horde. The average fan can always anticipate the ending of a western; it never varies; in "Gun Gospel" it's there in all its glory. After a terrific combat with fists and guns Maynard takes the gal in his arms while the villains, shame faced and bruised, are led away to jail. Yes, it's the old stuff which practically every western of the day throws out at you in large chunks.

Besides his confident grin, Maynard has his horsemanship, something in which he really excels. "How this boy can ride!" they will gasp. Well, there's many a shot of Ken and Tarzan galloping down the rocky roads in "Gun Gospel." Action it has in abundance. Do the fans want anymore in a western?

Drawing Power: Good. The western fans will gobble it up, unless we're sadly mistaken. Exploitation Angles: The hero and his horse. Noah Young's comedy. The action and riding.

THEME: Outdoor action drama of the cow country. A young man vows never to use his guns again, but when he is cornered by the man who killed his father he fights back with guns, fists and everything. He shows the villain up and wins a pretty gal.

Produced by Charles R. Rogers. Distributed by First National. Released, November, 1928. Length, 6,288 feet. The Cast: Ken Maynard, Virginia Brown Faire, Bob Fleming, Romaine Fielding, J. P. McGowan, Jerry Madden, Noah Young, Tom Day, Bill Dyer, Slim Whitaker. Story by W. D. Hoffman. Scenario by Marion Jackson. Director, Harry J. Brown.

The Cheer Leader

Conventional College Yarn

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

HERE'S a film that is to be viewed with an eye for humor—although the producers evidently intended it as a rattling good story of the campus. It makes you laugh even at the moments when it is offering something not intended as humor. They have clothed the various characters exaggeratedly. The hero is a regular Dick Merriwell, a chap who can cast aside the ignominious sweater of a cheer leader and enter a gridiron fray just when his team is tottering on the brink of defeat.

The antics of the cast all take place at a co-educational college, Fairview by name. There's a story of how one of the football players plays one friend against the other and succeds in getting them both off the team. There are lots of collegiate capers, not up to the grade of some of the really good college comedies we have had in the past, and often quite weak as laugh material.

Aside from these harpings, the picture has some fair portrayals from Gertrude Olmsted, Ralph Graves, Harold Goodwin and Ralph Emerson. But we believe they have muffed the picture; it could have been better if they hadn't tried so hard (and so obviously) to make its story and its comedy so apparent that even a wee mite of a child could understand it. The westerns are unique in that line. The college yarn shouldn't follow unless it is anxious to become besmirched with the trite and commonplace.

Drawing Power: Fair. It has a good title and may draw the younger crowd. Okay for the second runs, neighborhoods and double feature bills or where they feature vaudeville, too. Exploitation Angles: The collegiate title. Doll up the theatre and lobby with banners, etc. Try a cheering contest. Offer a prize for the widest pair of collegiate trousers among your audience.

Open Range

Edible Enough for Western Fans

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

ANOTHER of Zane Grey's many western yarns makes an appearance in celluloid in this western starring Lane Chandler, one of Paramount's young leading men, who has little Betty Bronson as his feminine support. The film has Indians galore, a cattle stampede and similar actionful episodes. It has some foolishness mixed with its fireworks, too. The hero is painted as a smart aleck, but the girl likes his freshness and confident poise.

Fred Kohler is the half-breed Indian who mingles with the whites and steals their cattle on the sly. He is having everything his own way until the hero puts in an appearance, and is caught in the swirl of events. The hero is mistaken for a rustler and has to flee for his life, but never is he off his feet, for his calmness under fire is never ruffled. The outcome of it all is that the villain is ultimately revealed as a rogue and everything is jake for the hero and his girl.

There is some inconsistency in one of the scenes which shows the heroine the victim of runaways. Although the horses make their wild break in view of hundreds of people, none witness the affair except the lone hero, who dashes to the rescue. The finale in which the Indians are razing the town and the whites, in despair, stampede their cattle through the streets in order to get rid of their enemy, is unconvincing.

Drawing Power: Fair. Just a program picture which will have to be helped along by another feature. For neighborhood houses. Exploitation Angles: Zane Grey's name, the names of Betty Bronson and Fred Kohler in the cast. Tell them it's an action picture.

THEME: Outdoor action drama of rustlers and Indians and Indians against a young cowpuncher.

Produced and distributed by Paramount. Released, November, 1927. Length, 5,599 feet. The Cast: Lane Chandler, Betty Bronson, Fred Kohler, Bernard Siegel, Guy Oliver, Jim Corey, George Buck Connors. Story by Zane Grey. Scenario by John Stone and J. W. Ruben. Director, Clifford Smith.

That Certain Thing

Light Comedy

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

ELMER HARRIS has fashioned a nice little picture, which boasts no fancy frills nor elaborate sets, but which tells a pleasant story and tells it well. Perhaps the theme of the poor little girl who brings out the best in a disinherited son of wealth, is not an original one, and has been used ere this out Hollywood way. Even so, you do not object to its unoriginality, considering its capable presentation. Frank Capra's direction is a pleasing job.

Little Viola Dana is the girl of the tenements who marries Ralph Graves, the shiftless son of a rich man. There's comedy in the courtship and quick marriage, but it becomes very serious for the wedded pair when the father disinherits his son and the latter realizes he will have to go to work. Graves suddenly, in this crisis, gets an idea: to start a business organization peddling his wife's delicious lunch boxes. Hasn't he tasted her lunches and doesn't he know they are good?

So there's more comedy when this shiftless young chap inveigles his irate father, the owner of a string of restaurants, to purchase his business at a round sum. All ends rosily for the newlyweds. Graves is well cast as the lazy chap. The petite Miss Dana is pleasing as the pertinacious little girl from the tenements.

Drawing Power: Good. For the neighborhood trade and houses which present vaudeville acts. Exploitation Angles: The story has to do with a lunch box factory—utilize that fact. Its title is intriguing, and featured players are known.

THEME: Comedy drama of a tenement girl who weds a rich man's son only to have her dreams of wealth shattered when the rich man cuts off her husband without a cent. They get an idea to enter the restaurant business and so good are the young wife's sandwiches that the father buys their business at a handsome figure and presents them with a wedding check into the bargain.

Produced and distributed by Columbia. Released, January, 1928. Length, 6,047 feet. The Cast: Viola Dana, Ralph Graves, Burr McIntosh, Aggie Herring, Carl Gerard, Sydney Crossley. Story and adaptation by Elmer Harris. Director, Frank Capra.

"Visitors Welcome"

(Educational—Two Reels)

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

IT has been a long time since Johnny Arthur has had so good a comedy as he has in this Tuxedo directed by Harry Sweet. Sweet, a good director and the fellow who nursed Monty Collins along, seems to have put new life into Arthur. The result is a comedy in which the star receives excellent direction. Acting opposite Arthur is Lydia Yeamans Titus—and she is excellent.

Arthur, like Charley Puffy in one or two of the latter's comedies, takes in an old lady from the streets, his heart flowing over with sympathy for her because he has seen her ill treated. The old lady does not reciprocate this kindness, making home life miserable for Arthur and his wife, Lucille Hutton. Arthur's patience fast wanes; he does everything he can think of to squelch the busy-body, snooping tendencies of his guest, who has become a plague to him.

The scenes of the old lady's tyranny in the home, the way she irritates her hosts and causes Arthur to become a total wreck are well proportioned with comedy. In all, it's a good number.

The Pioneer Scout

Good Western Picture

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

A GOOD western is presented here. The likable Fred Thomson is the heroic young westerner—a scout on the frontier. He has to bunk up against all sorts of villainy, not the least of which comes from a renegade white man. They certainly have pressed lots of action into the conflict between these two men.

A very good villain enlivens the scenes. A dominant personality, this fellow, Tom Wilson, gives a very good account of himself. He is in no way hindered for lack of footage, and he takes advantage of every opportunity. The conviction is strong that he can cut a notch for himself as a villain as deep as Santschi and some of the other veterans.

Plenty of action and tense situations in which the hero is confronted with all sorts of danger succeed in keeping this western strung out taut. It does not let down after the first few reels have been hurdled, but maintains its tension. A wagon race between Thomson and the villain is placed nicely into the middle of things. It is excitingly done, and is a climax in itself.

The real crash comes at the final hundred feet or so when Thomson ventures into the renegade's den. The old ending makes its appearance once more: the villain being battered around by the hero and the heroine being saved by the self same complacent young man.

Practically all the attributes of the good western—good acting, action, story and scenery—are in this one.

Drawing Power: Good. Exploitation Angles: Bill Thomson's name prominently. Remind audiences of his previous picture, "Jesse James." Play up villain, wagon race and pretty Nora Lane.

THEME: Western action drama in which young frontier scout saves girl from the talons of an evil renegade.

Produced and distributed by Paramount. Released, January, 1928. Length, 6,118 feet. The Cast: Fred Thomson, Nora Lane, Tom Wilson, William Courtright. Story by Frank Clifton. Directors, Lloyd Ingraham and Alfred L. Worker.

Satan and the Woman

A Good Drama

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

A WELL-TOLD dramatic story is on hand in this Excellent Pictures production. Claire Windsor, the star, is surrounded by a good assortment of troupers so that the acting is all tip-top. The manner in which the picture moves to its conclusion is indication of sure supervision. This good production, we suppose, is due to Director Burton King and Harry Chandlee, who supervised the story and supplied the titles.

The tale is an adaptation by Adrian Johnson of Mary Lanier Magruder's "Courage," which was published in Young's Magazine. So there's an exploitation angle for you, Mr. Exhibitor. A fine characterization is Vera Lewis' in the role of a heartless old lady, who would regulate the lives of all around her and wreck the romance of her heir. The actress' role is very similar to that of the old termagant in "Siege." It is the sort of role which a good performer can make striking and outstanding. Miss Lewis has done this.

The evils of aristocracy play an important part in the story. The old lady, like a veritable tyrant, endeavors to ostracize the girl, her granddaughter, with whom her heir is in love. The granddaughter is alone in the world, but she is as proud as her persecutor, and as relentless in her determination to win out.

Drawing Power: Good. For second run and neighborhood houses. Exploitation Angles: Magazine angle. Masquerade ball in story. Gossips who figure in story. The star.

THEME: Drama laid in small town wherein ruthless old lady tries to crush romance between her heir and her granddaughter, whose parentage she will not acknowledge before world. The old tyrant dies and leaves her money to girl, having repented at last moment. A misunderstanding separates girl and her lover, and for a time she thinks of marrying an adoring lawyer. But she finds latter is after her money and that her former lover is man for her.

Produced by Samuel Zierler. Distributed by Excellent Pictures (S. R.). Released, January, 1928. Length, 6,400 feet. The Cast: Claire Windsor, Cornelius Keefe, Vera Lewis, Thomas Holding, James Mack, Edithe Yorke, Madge Johnston, Sybil Grove, Lucy Donahue and Blanche Rose. Scenarist, Adrian Johnson. Director, Burton King.

Comrades

Average Attraction

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

A BOY, a girl, a coward—and the war. Around these ingredients have been planted the grains of sentiment and hokum with the result that this film has more than the ordinary share of situations which can be relied on as faithful tear-getters. The hokum has been injected in large draughts, so that it seeps through all the nooks and corners of this celluloid creation.

When the action has switched to France, some semblance of life begins to appear. Some pretty good battle scenes are introduced. Although the hero carries on like an impossible warrior bold, capturing machine gun nests and performing other valorous acts, back at home his deeds are credited to his friend, a coward, and the latter's stigma of fear is accorded the heroic chap. You see, before going "over there" they had switched names.

The work of the cast is very tame; the direction, too, smacks very much of the mediocre. In all the picture throughout is of an average hue. The sentiment mounts steadily and overflows in the final scenes in which the coward gets bumped off leaving the road to happiness open to the boy and girl.

Just an average state rights production, "Comrades" would have been a better piece of work if more vigor had been made manifest in the direction and more convincing performances culled from the cast. Joseph Swickard is best among the latter.

Drawing Power: Fair. Exploitation Angles: Emphasize war angle and make use of posters showing trench scenes and the girl in her uniform of an ambulance driver.

THEME: Heart drama of the war.

Produced by James Ormont. Distributed by First Division Distributors, Inc. Released, January, 1928. Length, 5,400 feet. The Cast: Helene Costello, Donald Keith, Gareth Hughes, Josef Swickard, James Lloyd, Lucy Beaumont. Story by William Gilbert. Director, Cliff Wheeler.

The Leopard Lady

Good Mystery Melodrama

(Reviewed by E. G. Johnston)

PATHE has a good picture here, even 'though the story and atmosphere lacks originality. Action, smooth direction, unceasing interest and particularly good work by the principals are more than enough to offset what may have been an attempt to tear a few pages from Poe's Murders in the Rue Morgue, and to imitate the pin-wheel circus tricks of the picture "Variety." There is a slight touch of gruesomeness to the opening scenes, but not to the extent that it will offend the finicky folks. The efforts of Jacqueline Logan and Alan Hale seem to stand out, while those of Robert Armstrong and Jas. Bradbury, Sr., are a close second. The latter does a fine bit of character work. Suspense has been well handled.

The picture starts off with a bang. A wealthy woman staggers into her home dying from a ferocious attack. There is a circus in town and the saying is that crime seems to follow in its wake. An old woman is usually seen leaving the neighborhood of the crimes. A chief of police engages Paula, the Leopard Lady, to join the show offering a handsome reward if she is successful in unraveling the mystery. Caesar, the Cossack, becomes enamoured and, even though the latter saves her from death in the leopard cage, she sends for her chief to make the arrest. It has developed that Caesar has trained his pet ape to commit a long series of crimes and the final one was an attempt to do away with Paula's sweetheart.

Drawing Power: For all houses where a thrilling mystery melodrama is appreciated. Exploitation Angles: Play up mystery angle and names of principals.

THEME: Mystery of murder and pilfering is unraveled by Leopard Lady, who joins circus troupe on secret mission. Reward enables her to fulfill romance with ship captain.

Produced and distributed by Pathe. Released, Jan. 22, 1928. Length, 6 reels. The Cast: Jacqueline Logan, Alan Hale, Robert Armstrong, Hedwig Reicher, Jas. Bradbury, Sr., Dick Alexander, William Burt, Sylvia Ashton, Kay Deslys and Willie May Carson. Directed by Rupert Julian. From Edward Childs Carpenter's play. Well photographed by John Mescall.

"The Bicycle Flirt"

(Sennett-Pathe—Two Reels)

(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

BILLY BEVAN, Vernon Dent, Dot Farley and Carolle Lombard head the cast in this Mack Sennett slapstick comedy directed by Harry Edwards. It has a situation or a bit of knockabout comedy here and there that may be productive of laughs, but it is evident the whole thing was concocted out of nothing with the situations developed as the thing went along.

Bevan conducts a large part of his courtship astride a bicycle and while hanging to the rear-end of the girl's auto. Her brother-in-law insists that she discard her regular boy friend and acquire for herself a business man like himself. When Billy comes along she decides upon him, and his case is further helped when he runs afoul of the machine and is taken to the family home of the brother-in-law.

There Billy, living on the fat of the land, is nursed back to health by the girl, and all goes well until the arrival of the original boy friend, who, under the circumstances, is welcomed even by the brother-in-law. Billy is given the gate, and all ends happily for everyone but him.

Woman Wise

Carries Its Share of Comedy

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

THE American consul in the capital of Persia, his demure and attractive secretary, an American friend with strong inclinations to gallivant after women, and various Oriental personages are the characters who parade through this concoction of comedy pieced together with snatches of drama and fistic brawls. Just a program picture in its acting and story content, it is of the kind which the men-folk will enjoy more than the women because the humor is often free and easy, and of the "razzberry" type glorified in "What Price Glory."

It introduces a new feminine player in the person of June Collyer. She has reserve and natural charm, her features delicate and sensitive like Mary Astor's. Her charm pervades the consulate and the result of her presence is that the consul changes from a woman-hater into an ardent admirer, and his friend, the gay Lothario, forgets his roving tendencies and also centers his attention on the pretty secretary.

The two forget they are rivals when a wicked pasha attempts to steal the girl. They use straight Tunney lefts and crashing Dempsey rights on the jaws of the potentate's gang of kidnappers. The Americanos clean up the pasha's men with a vengeance.

Drawing Power: Fair. Bill Russell is the only well known name in the cast, so it's lacking in the "name" asset. Exploitation Angles: Bring home the point that it is a story of three Americans' adventures in a Persian town. Make a bid for the men's trade.

THEME: The American consul in Persian capital is forced to harbor friend when latter wins enmity of ruling pasha. Consul, angry at fact that his pretty new secretary is disturbing equilibrium of his life, learns to love her, although he has a rival in his friend. Pasha tries to spirit secretary away, but two Americans defeat his purpose. Girl later weds consul.

Surrender

Misplaced Climax Mars It

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

THIS picture carries a powerful wallop in its climax. A situation strong, intense and pregnant with deep, human emotion—it works on an audience catching all their sympathy for the heroine; but this climax is misplaced, coming as it does in the middle of the film and making what follows trite and uneventful and like the distant echoes of a tremendous crash, like the faint ripples caused by a rock which has splashed water. "Lea Lyon," Alexander Brody's play from which this picture has been adapted, evidently had an excellent second act, but a very weak third.

The scene is laid in a Galician town near the Russian border, and the time is one of war. The heroine is the daughter of the village Rabbi. Her beauty attracts the attention of the autocratic general of the Russian troops, who take possession of the village and she is faced with the horrible prospect of either submitting herself to the Russian general or seeing her people killed like dogs.

The drama is piled on generously with throbbing emotional action from Miss Philbin. Her big scene is suspenseful and well directed. Ivan Moskine, on the other hand, does not look nor act like the regal general; rather, he's more of comedian than a dramatic actor. Nigel de Brulier is excellent as the Rabbi and Otto Mattiesen does good work as the cringing suitor for the heroine's hand.

Drawing Power: A good attraction for all sorts of houses. Exploitation Angles: Mention the predicament of the heroine—how, like another Judith, she risks her honor to save her people. Bill Moskine as the star of "Michael Strogoff."

THEME: The happenings in town near Russian border during war. Russian general whose troops occupy town orders virginal daughter of village Rabbi to submit to his whims. To avoid torture of her kinsfolk which he threatens she goes to him, but he does her no harm, his better nature having been aroused. When war is over he comes back to her and they are happy.

Produced and distributed by Universal. Released, March, 1928. Length, 8,249 feet. The Cast: Mary Philbin, Ivan Moskine, Otto Mattiesen, Nigel de Brulier, Otto Fries, Daniel Makarenko. From play by Alexander Brody scenarized by Charles Kenyon. Director, Edward Sloman.

"Indiscreet Pete"

(Educational—Two Reels)

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

THE small, nattily dressed figure of Jerry Drew looms large among the Educational studio's roster of comics. Jerry, always associated with his silk hat, is a polite type of comedian—that is he does not have to throw a pie or take a fall to be funny. He relies on pantomime rather than slapstick.

It was as a drunk, we believe, that Drew (then called Clem Beauchamp) made his Educational debut. He was very good in that role, hiccoughing, peering through keyholes and acting like an inebriate. While interpreting a role like that he gets some pretty good laughs. Do you remember him is the comedy in which he strolled into a general store and asked the proprietor whether or not he had any dry herring? Receiving an affirmative answer, he calmly doffed his hat and remarked negligently, "Well, give them a drink."

Drew carries on in much the same fashion in this comedy wherein he is dodging his tailor to whom he owes some money. He gets into the apartment of a young wife, causes her husband to fly into a rage, and boards a Pullman to escape his troubles. There are some pretty good comedy situations on the Pullman. Harry Sweet directed (and did another good job). In the cast are Betty Boyd, Robert Graves and Sydney Franklin.

"Feline Frolics"—"The Tonquin Valley"

(Educational—One Reel)

KITTENS playing among themselves and enjoying life in general. Fourteen kittens and two mother cats are the subjects shown. The friskness and playfulness of the kittens provides some humor as well as some interesting camera work.

The Tonquin Valley is the other subject in this Bruce Outdoor Sketch. The valley is a beautiful spot, boasting a range of mountains unique in their formation—the Ramparts. There are several shots of these peaks as well as glimpses of Amethyst Lake and campers in the valley.—RAYMOND GANLY.

Marry the Girl

Routine Romantic Melodrama

(Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy)

CHIEFLY because it effects a touching situation expressing the always appealing paternal love type of drama, this offering from Sterling Pictures, directed by Phil Rosen, strikes a fair balance as program entertainment. Mr. Rosen, equipped with nothing much in the way of story material, played directly for full power of the scenes between the embittered old man and the boy he has been led to believe is his grandson. The director's choice was a wise one, for herein lies perhaps the only worth-while dramatic content of a plotty and mechanically contrived melodrama. It is an old-school recitation about an old man living with the hurts he has sustained from an episode of check-forging which he thinks was done by his son.

The same conniving parties, his secretary and housekeeper, who "framed" the son, now introduce to him a young and attractive woman as the widow of his son, long missing from the parental home. She has a boy, whom the old man believes is his grandson. It is quite obvious to the spectator that the secretary is up to some dirty work. His plan is to win over the old man to the young woman, change his will in favor of her and the boy, and then marry the girl, thus collecting by devious route the fortune the secretary covets. This is all very well until young Wayland return to prove his innocence of the check-forging. He allows his father to continue in ignorance that he is still alive, and during the time he spends developing his case against the secretary, young Wayland falls in love with his supposed widow, so when the expose comes, the old man urges the "widow" to remain so that he may have the companionship of the youngster he has developed a deep affection for. All this has the benefit of a production that is pleasing to the eye. capable acting, and it manages to hold the interest quite consistently.

Drawing Power: Fair program strength. Exploitation Angles: Straight billing as heart drama stressing Bedford, Ellis and Turner "names."

THEME: Melodramatic romance with parallel love themes involving old man's affection for grandson and man-woman love, developing as a result of scheme by plotters to get the fortune of an embittered and lonely capitalist.

Produced by Sterling Productions, Inc. Distributed by Sterling Pictures Distributing Corp. Released, March 1, 1928. Length, 5,300 feet. The Cast: Barbara Bedford, Robert Ellis, Florence Turner, De Witt Jennings, Freddie Frederick, Allan Roscoe, Paul Weigel. Story by Wyndham Gittens. Director, Phil Rosen.

"Felix the Cat in the Oily Bird"

(Educational—One Reel)

FELIX the cat continues his lonesome way in this one from the Sullivan studio. For all the world like another Lonesome Luke, the cat is always getting into trouble. His mistress accuses him of stealing her jewels, hence his ignominious ejection from the house. Learning that a hen has swallowed the gems he chases her in order to clear his good name. The bird, in desperation, digs a hole to escape from Felix. The tumult that results in the hole when the cat goes in after her causes an oil spout—much to the joy of the cat's mistress.

Entertaining.—RAYMOND GANLY.

The Smart Set

Haines Has a Good Picture

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THEY'RE casting William Haines in stereotyped roles now and he is one actor who isn't suffering by it. Having established himself as the best interpreter of "smart-aleck" parts, there seems to be no reason why he shouldn't continue to shine in them. The present story is just a variation of the other recent efforts—with perhaps a bit more class to it.

In other words, Haines is cast as a blue-blood who is the star of the crack polo team defending his country. He thinks more of individual grand-stand play than working in harmony with other members of the four. So on the eve of the big game he is suspended from the team. This brings him to an understanding with himself. Realizing that his friends have turned against him he learns humility and makes good. He is rushed into the game at the last minute and turns defeat into victory.

There is quite a lot of dash to the picture. It carries a horsey flavor about it. There is a good thrill in the scene of the burning stable, when Haines rushes in to save his favorite pony. And the game itself is full of color and excitement. It reeks with atmosphere and hasn't a flaw except for a couple of inconsequential details. The comedy relief doesn't belong.

Drawing Power: Star is popular. Should go well in all types of houses. Exploitation Angles: Play up title and exploit the polo match. Use lobby display. Feature Haines as one of the most popular stars.

THEME: Romantic drama of "smart-aleck" who realizes that he's not so hot. So he makes good in polo match.

Produced and distributed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Length, six reels. Released, March, 1928. The Cast: William Haines, Jack Holt, Alice Day, Hobart Bosworth, Paul Nicholson, Julia Swayne Gordon, Constance Howard. Director, Jack Conway.

The Showdown

Good Melodrama for Bancroft's First

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

IN elevating George Bancroft they've started him off on the right foot. This isn't to say that he has the world's masterpiece here. But he has something which should entertain nine fans out of ten. The new star continues in heavy melodrama and has a role which affords him plenty of excitement and adventure. And so sure of his technique is Bancroft that the plot never wavers in interest.

The action places the characters in the tropics—with the central figures in search of the "black gold," as oil is called in most subtitles. The fight for oil is contrasted with the fight to love. A woman comes into their lives and Bancroft, as the dominant personality, conquers his enemies, though at the end he drifts on toward other fields for success. The fight between the principal characters is a humdinger—one executed in typical movie fashion. It is well produced and should appeal to patrons of the sterner sex. It is competently acted by the star and Evelyn Brent and Fred Kohler.

Drawing Power: Should appeal to men patrons. Good for downtown houses. Exploitation Angles: Play up Bancroft's elevation to stardom and what he has accomplished on the screen. Feature Evelyn Brent, who worked with him in "Underworld." Bill as lively melodrama of the South Seas.

THEME: Melodrama of search for oil with men fighting over love of a woman.

Produced and distributed by Paramount. Length, six reels. Released, March, 1928. The Cast: George Bancroft, Fred Kohler, Neil Hamilton, Evelyn Brent, Leslie Fenton, Arnold Kent, Helen Lynch. Director, Victor Schertzinger.

If I Were Single

Mildly Amusing Little Number

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THERE isn't much background of plot and characterization in this picture, which skids along on pretty thin ice. Its idea could be fully exploited in three reels, but it has been padded here and there to provide feature length. The idea revolves around a bit of a triangle and the figures that build it don't extend beyond a quartette.

One sees a young married couple living together in more or less pugnacious fashion. According to all the rules of Formula No. 49 the husband must play around with another woman while the wife becomes attracted to another man. And so it follows this plan—with everything straightened out satisfactorily for a happy finish.

It's a slight, fluffy plot, but it furnishes some amusement through some fairly crisp situations. It smacks of a story that Lubitsch might have directed, only the German director's deft touch is missing. It is properly staged and acted very well. Indeed, the interpreation is the best thing about it. May McAvoy, Conrad Nagel and Myrna Loy and Andre Beranger contribute first-rate performances.

Drawing Power: Suitable for average houses. Exploitation Angles: Tease the title and exploit principals. Bill as domestic comedy.

THEME: Triangle of married couple who play around only to become reconciled eventually.

Produced and distributed by Warner Brothers. Length, six reels. Released, March, 1928. The Cast: May McAvoy, Conrad Nagel, Myrna Loy, Andre Beranger. Director, Roy Del Ruth.

"Builders of Bridges"—"When Twilight Comes"

(Educational—One Reel)

THIS Bruce Outdoor Sketch shows the activities of workmen building a bridge over the Cascade Rapids of the Columbia River. The perilous work is presented in some detail—the dangers with which the men are confronted (they work at a height of 150 feet above the water), the speed at which they carry on the riveting, their steadiness of foot in crossing a thin stretch of steel beam. The camera takes you right up among these men so that you get an idea of their nerve and coolness in so perilous a task.

Follows one of Bruce's nature studies—a scene of the sun going down behind the hills. The clouds lose their golden tinge and twilight approaches, changing the scene subtly but softly. These views must be seen to be appreciated; wordy descriptions are useless. The entire reel, we believe, is animated by the artistic touch, so noticeable in the photography and the titles which Bruce has chosen to adorn his scenes.—RAYMOND GANLY.

"The Ring Leader"

(Universal—Two Reels)

(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

THIS western featurette featuring Jack Perrin has an even slimmer story and a more illogical one than usual, if that is possible. As its highlight Perrin's horse, Starlight, is instructed to and does race across country and deliver the message that brings relief to the mounties and his girl friend, who are in the direst distress.

It seems that the murdered father of the girl has left with her a paper which incriminates the Compte gang in his murder, and the gang is bent on getting that paper back. They ride to the McLean cabin, where they are overtaken by Perrin, the mountie, who is bested after a fierce battle. The girl then is forced to give up the paper and a guard is left at the cabin.

It is then that the horse is called upon. He is told to deliver the note to the headquarters of the mounties and he is off to his task. He is seen dashing madly across country and arriving at headquarters. Relief is forthcoming immediately and it is a fortunate thing for Perrin and the girl, for the former is again engaged in a desperate fight with the bandits, and is apparently getting none the better of it when Starlight looms in the offing with two of Jack's buddies, who lose no time in putting the shackles on the desperadoes.

There are three or four of the usual stereotyped fist fights in which the mountie is always badly outnumbered. If it were not for the fact that casts were changed occasionally in these westerns these fist fights could well be kept in stock, for their action never varies. There is also some riding of the standard brand.

"The Newlyweds' Friends"

(Universal—Two Reels)

(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

SNOOKUMS, as usual, is just about the whole picture in this comedy of the Newlyweds series. He is a precocious kid, who upsets things generally throughout the two reels. Were it not for the winsomeness of the youngster, there would not be much to the picture. He has a remarkable personality and a rare flair for comedy, which fairly makes you like him and everything he does.

Here Snookums spills the beans generally, both while the preparations for the friends' wedding and the wedding are going on. He is the page to the bride, but instead of carrying her train he rides it, and brings about general consternation when the train and the rear of the dress suddenly part at the belt line.

While the attendant excitement in this circumstance is going on, the bride's diamond necklace is stolen and all the guests are ordered searched. The thief is about to make his getaway when Snookums discovers he is hiding in a huge cabinet in the hallway. The youngster snaps the lock on the cabinet and effects the capture of the thief.

The story is somewhat disconnected to make way for a lot of gags, many of which are not needed, as the action is fast enough without them.

"Ringside Romeos"

(Universal—One Reel)

ARTHUR LAKE has a better story than usual in this one-reeler of the Snappy Comedy series. As a soda dispenser Arthur's jealousy is so aroused by the arrival at the counter of his girl and his rival that he is short changed fifteen dollars by a slicker. The manager of the store threatens arrest unless the shortage is made good.

A handbill announcing a cash prize for the winner of a boxing tournament attracts Arthur's attention, and he decides to go after it. His opponent in the finals is his rival, Buddy Messinger. They engage in a desperate battle, with Arthur getting all the worst of it until he lands a lucky haymaker and puts Buddy out.

There is some humor that is not so good, but all in all the picture is one of the best of the series to date.—CHESTER J. SMITH.

Regional News from Correspondents

Kansas City

A NEW move has been in the film war of Hiawatha, Kas., which has attracted statewide interest because of the technical facts involved. Recently Dr. L. W. Shannon, exhibitor of Hiawatha, won an injunction suit in closing Hiawatha's $150,000 memorial auditorium insofar as the showing of motion pictures was concerned. The hall had been under the management of William Schenkelberger and motion picture programs, to which admission had been charged, were given. Dr. Shannon argued the memorial was a public building, exempt from the ordinary taxation to which theatres are subjected, and therefore should not be permitted to be turned into a commercial theatre. Dr. Shannon's victory in the suit presumably ended things until this week, when Dr. Shannon filed an affidavit of contempt of the injunction, charging Schenkelberger had been booking and showing motion pictures. Since Schenkelberger had been barred from showing pictures in the memorial, he had continued to book and advevrtise pictures as being shown under the management of the trustees of the memorial.

The Electric theatre, first run house of Kansas City, Kas., through its public relations department, has issued a house organ, known as the Electric Newsette, to be distributed to patrons twice a week.

The Midland theatre, first run house of Kansas City, last week started a radio broadcasting program in conjunction with the Kansas City Journal-Post, a daily newspaper. A studio has been installed in the theatre and a schedule arranged as follows: organ recital 10:30 to 11:30 daily in the morning; entire stage program at 7:30 nightly; 11 P. M. each Tuesday, Sundodgers program, including extra entertainers.

More than 30,000 school children thus far have seen the Alaskan picture, "Top o' the World," educational picture being shown at Kansas City schools under the auspices of the Kansas City Star, a daily newspaper. There has been no opposition to the showing of the picture on the part of exhibitors as the Star's policy has been unusually friendly to the screen industry and the showing of the picture, it is believed, will stimulate interest in motion pictures.

The following changes in ownership, improvements and new theatres in the Kansas City territory have been announced: the Smith building in Conception Junction, Mo., has been rented by C. C. Reynolds and will be used as a motion picture theatre; the "Lindy" theatre, Monette, Mo., which succeeds the Gem theatre, held its opening night the other night; the Wetzel theatre, Tina, Mo., has become a Paramount house and will be managed by J. G. Wetzel; the Globe theatre, Meade, Kas., has been sold by Martin Griggs to Edward Rowland of Texhoma, Okla.; the Jefferson theatre, Springfield, Mo., has been sold by S. E. Wilhoit to Ensley Barbour; the Warsaw theatre, Warsaw, Mo., has been purchased by S. H. Yaffie of Springfield, Mo.; the newGrecian theatre, Neosho, Mo., is expected to open in a few days; the new Lincoln theatre, Clay Center, Kas., has been opened under the management of Clyde Bomar; the Odeon theatre, Lyons, Kas., has been purchased by Hugh P. Hartley to J. A. Townsley; W. C. Sears, former partner in the Sears theatrical circuit, has been made manager of the Royal, Orpheum and Colonial theatres, operated by Universal, in St. Joseph, Mo.

Mrs. June Metcalf, secretary of the M. P. T. O. Kansas-Missouri, was standing in the lobby of the City Bank of Kansas City Friday just in time to be in the thick of a $50,000 hold-up in which two bandits "shot up" the bank. "If they would put that type of action in western pictures the attendance problem would disappear," said Mrs. Metcalf.

Walter Wallace of Leavenworth, Kas., has had a good many things "wished" upon him in his life, but the climax came the other night when some one left a 10-day-old baby in the washroom of the Orpheum theatre, of which Wallace is manager. The baby was taken to a hospital.

A panic was averted in the Gladstone theatre, Kansas City, by George Baird, doorman, Monday night. Baird discovered a fire in the storeroom of the house. He notified the operator, quickly told the audience there was no danger, but to file out orderly. They did. The fire damage was small.

C. C. Vaughn has succeeded W. E. Knipe as assistant manager of the Kansas City Universal branch, Mr. Knipe having been made supervisor of accessories for Universal in four offices. Fred Healy is the latest addition to the sales force at the Tiffany exchange. Beverly Miller, district manager of National Screen Service, was a Kansas City business visitor. Russell Borg, Educational branch manager, was confined to his bed because of illness this week, Bill Warner, First National branch manager, was hustling in the territory this week.

Dallas

JOSEPH E. LUCKETT, recently sales manager for the United Artists Dallas branch, is now in New Orleans relaxing after nine years' service with the Dallas office. Mr. Luckett, better known to the trade as Uncle Joe, was more than praised by members of the trade at a testimonial dinner given in his honor before he left. Very seldom does the departure of a man from his accustomed duties bring forth so much deep feeling and regret as were shown at this dinner. The United Artists office force presented Mr. Luckett with a watch, and Cresson Smith, assistant general sales manager, told of the esteem the home office had for Uncle Joe. Mr. Luckett has made no statement concerning his future plans.

L. E. Schneider, Western Divisional Manager for Publix, was in Dallas on an inspection trip of the Publix theatres. Mr. Schneider is paying all of the Public theatres in this region a visit to assist in solving the problems of each individual theatre, and also to ascertain business conditions in this section.

Lieut. Phil Love, who is a very close friend of Col. Charles A. Lindbergh, and who preceded Lindbergh on his tour of the States, was in Dallas on a missionary trip to demonstrate the safety features of present day flying. Lieut. Love, accompanied by Ross A. Wiegand, publicity manager for the Melba theatre, Helen of Hollywood (Marian Gaylord), Ray Beale, exploitation man for Metro-Goldwyn, and a camera man, made a flight to Ft. Worth and back.

James O. Cherry, manager of the Melba, could not be persuaded to make the flight. He said he had "too much work left to be done on the ground." However, Mr. Cherry told Lieut. Love that he would make his initial flight with him should he return to Dallas some time in the future.

L. J. Finske, assistant manager of the Publix Palace theatre, Dallas, has been transferred to the Alabama theatre at Birmingham, Ala. J. M. O'Connell, of the Riviera theatre, Omaha, was chosen to fill the vacancy left by Mr. Finske and has assumed his new duties.

C. B. Stiff, district manager for Publix, has returned from a two weeks' trip through Texas, visiting the Publix theatres.

L. B. Remy, of the Fox exchange, has returned from a business trip to New Orleans, Atlanta and Memphis.

Le Roy Bickel, manager of the Metro-Goldwyn Dallas exchange, made a two weeks' trip to the Rio Grande Valley.

Ray Beale is in charge of the exploitation of "Love," "The Student Prince," and "The Enemy," for Metro-Goldwyn. Mr. Beale divides his time between Dallas and New Orleans. He has just returned to New Orleans after spending several days in Dallas.

Mr. Beale stated that business in New Orleans during Mardi Gras was capacity plus, but that business was down now due to the reaction always experienced after the celebration, and also due to the Lenten season.

W. B. King, of the King Scenic Co., has returned from a business trip to Chicago. While in Chicago, Mr. King made arrangements with F. A. Van Husen of the E. E. Fulton Co., to be the distributor of Fulco products in this territory. Mr. King stated that he had also made arrangements to handle Simplex Ticket Machines in this region for the National Electric Ticket Machine Co. of St. Louis. According to Mr. King, business has been very good.

Hal Norfleet has been in Houston the past week finishing up the Houston Kid Comedy for the Interstate circuit.

May has been chosen as "Ernest Leeves Pathe Month," and Mr. Leeves has asked the exhibitors to boost his month up as it is his first call to them for assistance.

John Hathaway, assistant conductor of the Palace orchestra, has been chosen as the successor to Sigmund Boguslowsky as director of the Palace orchestra. Mr. Hathaway will assume his new duties March 10th. He has been a trumpeter in the Dallas orchestra since the Palace opened, and has directed the orchestra on several occasions, and has arranged scores for many films. Ken Whitmer will continue to direct the stage band.

Mrs. W. B. King, who suffered a nervous breakdown due to the death of her mother, is now getting along fine.

Rob Rowley, of the R. & R. Enterprises, is recovering from a serious illness in Little Rock, Ark.

Ed Brady, of the Capitol theatre, Brownsville, Texas, was on the Dallas film row the past week and dropped in to compliment Mr. King, of the King Scenic Co., on the drapes he installed in the Capitol.

New York & New Jersey

NOW that Loew, Inc., have been reported as signing a long term lease on the State theatre, Jersey City, it seems unlikely that this firm will further project their plans for another large house in the vicinity of Journal Square. The State has a seating capacity of about 3,000 and is a modern and well equipped theatre. The new Stanley, seating close to 5,000, is scheduled to open March 23 and there will then be approximately 10,000 seats in this neighborhood. There are about 30,000 more seats in the neighborhood districts and all in all these figures would appear to represent enough seats to satisfy the customers in this city and its environs.

A story to the effect that the Broadway site occupied by the Hotel Astor would in the near future be converted to the use of a 6,000 motion picture theatre seems to have had no more weight than some more of its kind that travel up and down the film row each week. From what this writer is able to ascertain the owners of the Astor Hotel have only recently signed a five or ten year lease on the hotel.

And then there is another rumor that a clothing firm in the vicinity of the Mark Strand will be unable to renew their lease and that a big new theatre will arise on this property and the site of the old Strand. If one could believe a report like this it really does not seem so illogical, for after all the Strand is the daddy de luxe motion picture house of Broadway, being over fourteen years old. During the last few years this theatre has been in the thick of much competition with the Paramount a few blocks downtown and the Roxy and Capitol above. It would therefore not be at all surprising if the owners of the Strand should decide to modernize the house to a point where it would at least be on equal terms with others.

The Theatrical Mutual Association, Bronx Lodge Number 38, at 518 Willis Avenue, the Bronx, is sponsoring a ball to be held at Swiss Hall, 378 East 136th Street, for the benefit of the sick and otherwise distressed. A Practical Consideration of Some Common Projection Faults

AT the last meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engigineers, held at Lake Placid, N. Y., during the last week in September, 1927, a paper of special interest to projectionists was presented by Arthur Gray, Supervisor of Projection at Lancaster Theatre, Boston.

Gray's paper, "Practical Needs in Projection" brought up a number of points which had to do with the condition of film as received by theatres from the exchanges and described the effects of defective film—if it may be so referred to—on projection results. Much of his paper had to do with the ill effects of "buckled" film, it being brought out that such buckling was the direct result of greatly increased heat energy being passed through the film by use of reflector arc illuminators. In the extended discussion which followed the reading of the paper, it was generally agreed that the primary reason for film buckling was due to improper drying of the film before it left the exchanges, although one party to the discussion advanced the suggestion that this imperfect condition of the film was likely to result even after shipment from the exchange had been made, since exposure to moist atmospheric conditions would cause the film to absorb moisture.

Gray, in his paper, first took up the subject of splices, going on to say that very few exchange-made splices were properly made and invariably came apart when the film was being projected. We shall quote largely from his paper in order to present his findings to the readers.

Exchange Inspection Does Not Remove All Poor Splices

"Despite the improved methods of inspecting film at the exchanges, and the repairs which are made prior to shipment, it is the general experience of projectionists with whom I have discussed the matter that the print invariably must be re-examined at the theatre before being projected if a reasonable assurance against the film breaking while in the projector is to be had. They have learned that, while most of the loose splices are detected and removed at the exchange, some of them are not, and it requires only a single splice separating while in the projector to stop the show. The competent projectionist classifies this kind of accident as just about the worst possible thing which can happen in his work, and yet despite all the routine precautions which are taken to prevent it, mishaps of this nature continue to occur.

There are so many splices in some prints, especially those with numerous color inserts, that not all of them receive the frequent attention which is necessary to detect the first signs of them loosening up, and when once a splice has started to loosen, it is a menace until re-made. The fewer splices there are in a print, the less probable cause for trouble there will be; and, in making up prints, any planning which will keep the necessary number of splices at the minimum is desirable.

Many Laboratory Splices Are Improperly Made

It is my experience and, I think, the general one among projectionists, that the kind of loose splice which gives the most trouble is the machine-made laboratory splice. In our projection room at the Lancaster Theatre, a record is kept of the amount and kind of repair work necessary to the film which we project, and some of the data may be of interest.

Table I

Lancaster Theatre Film Inspection Record for Three Months' Period

	Feet
Footage of film used	411,653
Total of number of splices	6,892
Total number of splices re-made	211

Nature of Defects in Splices

	Number
Loosened	133
Unmatched Perforations	10
Damaged Perforations	5
Wide or Curled	51
Cracked along splice	12

Of the total number of splices that were re-made, 133, or 63 per cent of them, were re-made because they were either in a loosened condition when received from the exchange or else began to open up during the three-days' run of the print.

Intermittent Movement of Film Must Be Accurate

Trouble of a more technical nature, which are of recent development, and which concern the position in which the film frames seat at the film aperture, are giving many projectionists, and probably some who are not projectionists, considerable food for thought.

The placing in rapid succession of many thousands of film images at the aperture during the projection of a picture is a precise job. The mechanical process of doing this must be pretty nearly right and so, likewise, must be the film. Each successive frame of film must be brought to an abrupt stop at the aperture in virtually the same position occupied by all the preceding frames. The permissible tolerance for displacement of any frame or series of frames from this common position is very slight if projection faults of a certain nature are to be avoided.

Tension applied along the film tracks on the projector operates to maintain the frame of film in a flat plane at the aperture. Opposed to this tension is a tendency for the film to flex in the direction of the light source and assume a sort of "cupped" position while motionless in the light ray. The amount of bulge that will occur will depend upon certain characteristics of the film stock, the amount of heat incident on the film, and the photographic density of the film image.

Large Aperture Lens Requires Re-Focusing

So long as the film is in normal condition and continues to seat in a normal manner at the film aperture, the projection lens will focus all of the frame images equally, and the picture will appear sharp and well defined. Under conditions where the projection lens is working at a large relative aperture and consequently with a depth of focus that is slight, it may be necessary occasionally to re-focus the lens when pronounced changes in film density occur.

This may require considerable attention, while the act of doing this will be noticeable on the screen unless carefully performed. However, the point I want to make is that when the film, which is in a normal condition, is being projected, the control of the focus of the picture is in the hands of the projectionist, and it is his own error if the lens is not re-adjusted when it should be.

Buckled Film Causes In-And-Out-Of-Focus Effect on Screen

With film which is in a buckled condition, a very different and difficult situation is encountered. The term, "buckled film," is here used to designate film which has a decided tendency to flex just in one direction and then the other in a rapid and irregular manner while passing the film gate of the projector—this, regardless of the tension which is applied to it in the projection mechanism.

One sequence of frames will seat at the aperture as they should, another series may follow which will not, projection being accompanied by a distinctive rattling sound that is characteristic of film in this condition. The maximum difference in displacement between these frames, which head in alternate directions, is too great for the lens to accommodate, and a pronounced in-and-out-of-focus effect is experienced on the screen. Trouble of this nature has of late become quite general. That it is a serious problem seems agreed upon; but there seems to be some difference of opinion in ascribing causes.

Some have placed the whole blame upon the illuminating system of a widely used and excellent type of reflector arc light source, holding that this system, when working the projection lens at a large relative aperture, places too severe limitations upon permissible displacement of the film at the aperture; also, that troubles of the nature just set forth occur only when a light source of this type is used. With this conclusion I do not agree. Trouble may be aggravated under these conditions, especially when accompanied by much heat; but if the film is in a normal condition, no trouble at all would be experienced. The trouble is of too general a nature to pin down in this quarter.

Another opinion set forth admits the circulation of much buckled film and allows that this film is responsible for the epidemic of focussing troubles. The cause for the film becoming buckled is blamed to the vogue for brighter and still brighter pictures, which has resulted in film being subjected repeatedly to much higher orders of heat than has formerly been customary.

My own opinion is that the heat question has, undoubtedly, raised new problems, but has little effect upon causing film to buckle in the manner that has been described. Experiences with new film which had not been projected previously, and in which the trouble was very bad indeed, is one of the things which leads me to the conclusion that most of the trouble of this nature occurs before the film has been placed in circulation.

Buckling Occurs at Separated Points in Print

I have many times observed while projecting buckled film that the trouble would suddenly cease; be absent for perhaps several hundred feet; and then abruptly commence again. Examination disclosed the fact that the buckling started or stopped at splices which were made at the time the print was assembled. This seems to point out that some sections of the print had been subjected to conditions to which the other sections had not been. If the cause for the film becoming buckled occurred after the print had been placed in general circulation, the line of demarkation between good and bad could not possibly have been so well defined.

On several occasions I have taken sections of buckled film which were giving us trouble and have had them projected with a different type of light source system than that which we use and under more favorable optical conditions to determine, if possible, the comparative results.

It was difficult to determine if there was any difference under the more favorable conditions, though personally I think that some improvement could be noted. There surely was no marked difference, however, and the matter of real interest is that the in-and-out-of-focus effect persisted in all test cases.

Occasional instances of buckled film have always been experienced, but these few cases cannot be compared in importance to the large amount of film in this condition which has recently come into circulation. This, together with the more severe optical and heat conditions under which it is now commonly projected, has made the problem a serious one.

Caused By Improper Drying

In this discussion which followed Gray's paper it was generally conceded that the kind of buckling which Gray described was directly due to the film not being thoroughly dried in the laboratory.

The increased heat of the reflector arc system then caused the edge of the moist film to dry in advance of the center, with the result that a gradual warping of the film resulted. The edges of the film dried more quickly, largely because they were in contact with the heated head of the projector mechanism, whereas the center of the film was exposed at the aperture for only a short period of time.

Newspaper Opinions on New Pictures

"Sadie Thompson"—United Artists, Rivoli Theatre, New York City

Sun: An exact and powerful transcription of original. Moving and dramatic story moves forward logically and forcefully, and Miss Swanson is alive and vital as picturesque heroine. Not only does she excite her audience with her outbursts of fury, but she moves it with a deep sense of pity.. Screen acting in its best sense. Worthy to rank along few other great acting exhibitions in history of screen. F[illegible] in entire photoplay."

Worlds: "Distinguished and in many ways brilliant picture. Star herself has not been more happily cast or more dramatically effective. Artistry of Miss Swanson is evident and convincing, and in every way gives unmistakable proof of girl's great ability in pantomime. If you care even a little for beauty and restraint and understanding and penetrating intelligence in your picture plays, pay a visit to Rivoli."

Tribune: "Gloria Swanson plays Maugham's heroine better than she ever has played anything in all her career. Fascinating picture. Put 'Sadie Thompson' on your list."

Times: "Stirring drama, with shrewd development of plot and admirable characterization. One of secrets of success of film is sane manner in which good deal has been left to imagination. Miss Swanson especially clever. While this actress may have given cleverer performances in some of her pictures, she displays more genuine ability and imagination in this present production."

Mirror: "Makes you cry and it makes you laugh. If you're looking for nice emotional debauch, Gloria Swanson provides it in this drama of carefree joy-girl and her panic before onslaught of fanatic reformer. Gloria gives stunning performance. Is magnificent. Dandy picture."

News: "Gloria Swanson reaches emotional heights. Is lovely to look upon always. She hasn't given so spirited a performance since the old days."

Evening World: "Nothing so fine and sincere has ever been done by Miss Swanson. No other screen luminary could have done as well with this particular portrait—no other star could have given it all sordid, unbridled and lovable appeal which Miss Swanson gives to it and at the same time kept it as absolutely clean and unobjectionable as she has. Star must have loved this role, for nothing short of loving hands could have done with it what she has done. It is as if she had been rehearsing through the years for this one role. One will go a long way to find a better performance."

Journal: "Is Gloria Swanson's best picture since 'Manhandled.' In fact, she does better work in it than she has done in her career."

Telegram: "Swanson is revelation. She never looked better, and she never acted with more swagger, pep and good sense. Gloria delivers in this one. She doesn't fail 'her public.' Picture absolutely censor proof. Good movie and credit to Gloria."

Telegraph: "Her latest picture contains just proper proportions of artistry and box office, thus Gloria once again enjoys happy distinction of scoring gratifying personal triumph in winning photodrama. Her performance carries it to heights of histrionic achievement. Gloria has put tremendous wallop into her characterization. Star shoots through high heavens of new accomplishment to more splendid orbit in cinema skies than she has ever known."

Graphic: Actively moving picture. Good film and star who rose to action."

"TURN BACK THE HOURS"

Based on stage play by Edward E. Rose; screen play by Jack Jungmyer.

Produced by Sam Sax-Gotham.

Directed by Howard Bretherton.

Photographed by Norbet Brodin.

Supervised by Harold Shumate.

Titles by Sasey Robinson.

Edited by Don Diggins.

Production Manager: Carrol Sax.

The play is the thing, we have been taught, and "Turn Back the Hours," certainly lives up to that saying, for the story holds one's attention from the very beginning to the end, and Director Howard Bretherton must be credited with revealing a Myrna Loy, that is different than any one we have seen in a Warner Bros production. Walter Pidegon, fits perfectly as the lead opposite Miss. Loy, Sam Hardy should be featured in a series of "Bad Men" roles, for he makes light of the serious situations, but, with an understanding that only he can and still command attention. George E. Stone again does one of those brow beaten "Rats" little Mister Nobody who doesnt amount to much but always worms his way in to the plot and demands consideration, through his ability to really emote. Sheldon Lewis as an aide to Sam Hardy was excellent, his true ability as an actor came to light here. While Brody as Duanne was fine, she easily could have had more to do, but, the story had to be told with the young folks aided and abetted by the villain, who is killed off in the end.

The screen play, handling of the production by Director Bretherton, Cinematographer Norbet Brodin, Supervisor Shumate, Production Manager Sax, was on a par with the well balanced cast and EXHIBITORS HAVE MUCH TO RECOMMEND "TURN BACK THE HOURS" for it is clean entertainment, the kind that will please the whole family, and enough seriousness to hold and command attention all the way.

HARRY BURNS.

HOLLYWOOD is the hardest headed spot in the world for critical opinions on films. When they like them there, it's an endorsement de luxe for the rest of the country. Coming on the heels of "San Francisco Nights" and "Bare Knees," this peachy reception of "Turn Back the Hours" is a definite indication that Gotham has the box-office aim down to a Science. Watch for the 30 Big Money Makers for 1928-29! All box-office titles.

"-best show in town" ★

"A Band of Men whose Sweetheart was Death!"

From every corner of the world they came, that valiant band of youths who had tried everything in life but Death! There were men from sunny Spain, from far Argentina, from Fifth Avenue mansions, from the plains of Texas, from the downs of England—and each one had a past—a story to tell more thrilling than fiction. Fearful tragedies, smashed loves, lost fortunes had driven them to join that daredevil band of war fliers—"The Legion of the Condemned". Day after day, high above the earth, they flirted with Death, or drove their roaring planes far behind the enemy lines to land spies—the most hazardous mission of the war. "Stepsons of Hell" they were, whose only honorable discharge was a death certificate!

FAY WRAY and GARY COOPER, Paramount's Glorious Young Lovers, in a scene from "The Legion of the Condemned", their first co-starring picture. Directed by a man who himself was an ace, William Wellman, the story by John Monk Saunders.

"The LEGION of the CONDEMNED"

¶ Another of those great Paramount Pictures that are talked about by everyone and remembered for days and days! ¶ Popular approval, and critical opinion from coast to coast, placed Paramount 'way in the lead on all lists of the best pictures of 1927. 1928 hits are even greater! Because Paramount goes ever onward and upward, accelerating progress year by year. ¶ Ask your Theatre Manager when he is going to show "The Legion of the Condemned" and all the other great Paramount Pictures of 1928.

A TIP: If you've got "The Legion of the Condemned" coming along, count the day or days on which you show it as lucky days. If this is one which has slipped away from you, do what you can to nab it. For it is entertainment of the superior grade that will load your bank account down with good American dollars.

Paramount has a bell ringer in this. Here are some reasons why: a corking title, a first rate, gripping story, which contains romance, suspense, thrills, action and pathos; a splendid cast, which does its stuff mighty well and production values of real merit. Lordy, how the yarn grips—all the way, too! It's a very, very good picture.

Gentlemen—We Americans!

(No. 578 Straight from the Shoulder Talk by Carl Laemmle, President of the Universal Pictures Corporation.)

THERE ARE SOME PICTURES WHICH ARE BEYOND DESCRIBING.

THEY GIVE YOU SUCH A FEELING OF FULLNESS, THEY INSPIRE YOU with something so close to reverence and awe that words seem rather puny things.

SUCH A PICTURE IS "WE AMERICANS."

I THINK IT IS ONE OF THE BIGGEST PICTURES EVER MADE. I DON'T mean the biggest sets and the biggest crowds of extras. I mean the biggest sentiment, the biggest theme, the biggest appeal to the heart and soul.

"WE AMERICANS" WAS A SUCCESSFUL STAGE PLAY, WRITTEN BY Milton Herbert Gropper and Max Siegel, but I never saw such startling proof of the superiority of the screen over the stage in the telling of a great story.

EDWARD SLOMAN DIRECTED IT. ALFRED COHN WROTE THE adaptation. Carl Laemmle, Jr. supervised the production.

EVERY MEMBER OF THE CAST IS A STERLING PERFORMER AND YET so mighty is the sweep of the story that each one is lifted up to heights he never reached before. Such stories are rare. IN A WHOLE SEASON'S OUTPUT OF PICTURES THROUGHOUT THE WORLD, YOU CAN COUNT STORIES OF THIS QUALITY ON THE FINGERS OF ONE HAND!

PLEASE NOTE THE CAST:—GEORGE SIDNEY, BERYL MERCER, PATSY Ruth Miller, George Lewis, Albert Gran, Daisy Belmore, Michael Visaroff, Rosita Marstini, Eddie Phillips, Andy De Vino, John Boles, Flora Bramley, Jake Bleifer, Kathlyn Williams, Edward Martindel and Josephine Dunn.

THE STORY IS SIMPLE! ALL TRULY GREAT STORIES ARE. THIS ONE deals with the foreigners who come to America, some to become Americans and some to remain foreign. The generations born in this country outstrip the generations born abroad and it is this difference of viewpoint which makes the story.

THE FAMILY LIVES OF THESE AMERICANS AND NEAR-AMERICANS—their loves—their hates—their predjudices—their habits of thought—their humors—all these are portrayed in a manner which will make you shed tears one moment and chuckle the next.

I AM PROUD TO PRESENT THIS GLORIOUS PICTURE TO THE WHOLE WORLD. I FEEL THAT IN DOING SO, I AM HELPING TO MAKE THE WORLD A BETTER PLACE, I AM HELPING TO SOFTEN MANY A HEART AND I AM ADDING LUSTRE AND QUALITY TO THE MOTION PICTURE INDUSTRY.

AND (WHISPER) INCIDENTALLY, I AM RELEASING A PICTURE WHICH is going to give you the darndest dose of profit you ever had in all your born days.

In the Kansas City Hockey Club~

The Kansas City Hockey Club is the largest organization of its kind anywhere having pipe organ music. They recently installed a large Page DeLuxe Unit Organ with a three manual console in their Pla-Mor Recreation Center, in Kansas City, Mo.

The building which houses the Center is of a notable size; 300 feet long and 165 feet wide. The Page Unit Organ is placed in the balcony in one end of the auditorium, and is amply protected from the cold temperature of the ice rink.

It is interesting to note how this is done. The organ is mounted in specially constructed chambers, which are evenly heated at all times. The console is entirely surrounded by plate glass.

The Pla-Mor Center is increasingly popular—and now there is the added attractiveness of wonderful music from the Page Unit Organ. The Page was chosen by the Club because of its record of dependable performance, fine tonal quality, and instant response—outstanding Page features. Let Page serve you, too. Our architects are always glad to consult with you.

". . . . . and then in 1928 came a great turning point in the history of the picture industry.

"That year First National broke with FIVE famous record-breakers right off the bat!

"Colleen Moore in 'Her Wild Oat', Richard Barthelmess in 'The Patent Leather Kid', 'The Private Life of Helen of Troy', 'Shepherd of the Hills' by Harold Bell Wright, and Richard Barthelmess in 'The Noose'—one right after another! And each one better than the last.

"Of course everybody remembers these great hits today, just as they remember 'Abraham Lincoln,' 'The Sea Hawk,' and 'Birth of a Nation'. But the thing few people realize is that these five pictures that have come down in history were released in A SINGLE MONTH by A SINGLE COMPANY.

"And on top of that First National followed right up with a dozen others just as big, including Colleen Moore in 'Lilac Time', Richard Barthelmess in 'The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come', Charlie Murray in 'Vamping Venus', Johnny Hines in 'Chinatown Charlie', Harry Langdon in 'The Chaser', 'Ladies' Night in a Turkish Bath' with Jack Mulhall and Dorothy Mackaill, and Charlie Murray and George Sidney in 'Flying Romeos'.

"What a season that was!

"Of course all my house records were knocked sky-high.

"I remember as though it were yesterday how completely these great hits took the trade by storm.

"That one season started me on the road to success in the picture game. Those great FIRST NATIONAL pictures go a long way toward explaining my position as the dominant exhibitor in this territory today!"

"I made more money with 'The Patent Leather Kid' than with ____________________ *

Time to Wake Up

Lack of Spirit in Industry Is Reflected at Box-Office

By William A. Johnston

I HAD a talk last week about the ills of the picture industry with two well known and fair-minded exhibitors. They have modern theatres in good sized cities, have prominent places in exhibitor organizations, are experienced, sound and well balanced representatives of the important branch of the industry which retails pictures to the American public.

Both were pessimistic and belligerent.

The public, they assert, is not buying admissions.

Why not?

We discussed the unemployment situation, admission prices, etc.; and one said that pictures were not holding the public.

"There are no good pictures", he asserted. "I have had but one attraction in my house this year and that is 'The Jazz Singer.'"

So, we discussed the latter and its box-office appeal.

What pulled the people in? Was it Jolson? Yes, to an extent. The picture? No, it was just ordinary picture material. The sound movie? Probably, here was the answer. Novelty. A new impetus to dramatic effect. An appeal of a new kind that made word of mouth advertising. Something new!

The other exhibitor took honest exception to the statement that a year's output yielded not one real picture attraction—outside, of course, of the roadshows and striking successes which are withheld from the average American exhibitor.

"Well, name them", said the other. And the more optimistic of the two had a rather difficult time of it.

And then an editor had his say.

And here it is:

I believe that pictures are better than ever.

The inside graft and politics of production circles in Hollywood are deplorable and huge handicaps to any industry that must retail its goods to fit the broad public purse. Nothing of substantial progress will ever be had till this silliness, provincialism, selfishness and waste of Hollywood is thoroughly liquidated. Just the same the output is good. It costs over a hundred million yearly and it should cost about half of that, but it represents the best story material the world yields, and a great deal of remarkable and praiseworthy technic, and a brilliant array of screen personalities.

I believe that the sound movie is of tremendous importance; the picture greatly needs these new developments and will have them. I have unlimited confidence in the future of our tremendous investment in picture theatres.

But the trouble right now with the picture business is that there is no spirit within it.

It is in the doldrums.

There's no pep.

The public is apathetic because the business itself is apathetic.

If we don't tell the public that pictures are good, how can we expect the public to believe they are, and that they are worth the price of admission?

Would people buy cars as they are today—upsetting all along all estimates of the saturation point—if the automobile industry didn't boast so lustily about its wares?

True of any flourishing industry today.

Yet, in the picture business, we have the astounding spectacle of what is practically a non-advertised product.

And the plain truth is that you can't sell movies today without advertising—and a lot of it, too.

Just the other day I had a talk with a producer-distributor. He painted a black picture. His own business, he said, did not pay him the salary he felt he deserved, nor the profits to be expected of so speculative an enterprise. He had the pruning shears in his hands. He was going to cut costs all along the line—production and sales—and cut till it hurt.

That's just what he will do—and it will hurt.

"Are your pictures any good?" I asked.

"Yes", he said and defended them vigorously.

"Then, why," I asked, "don't you lead some loud cheers about them? Tell the exhibitor they are good and he'll tell the public."

Let us grant that the industry is in an economic fix, that, through scandalous salaries and appalling waste, the motion picture dollar is well nigh spent before it gets to the box-office. But let's never forget the dollars that must come from the public, and the fact that they will dwindle away and all will be lost if we don't keep up the spirit of enterprise that has made this business a great American industry.

It is not to be wondered at that one exhibitor—and 15,000 more—believe that there are no good pictures. For a year now he hasn't been told anything about them. New York is busy with mergers, and maneuvers, all designed to help the individual interest. Everybody is planning to get out. It's like a lot of farmers holding committee meetings in the barn while the crops are going to seed.

It's about time for the business to crawl out of its hole and lead some cheers about itself.

Leadership

WILLIAM H. McLAUGHLIN, of the Stoneham Theatre Co., Stoneham, Mass., sends us this letter:

"Dear Mr. Johnston:

"As an exhibitor who has been up against many problems in another industry I agree with you in your stand on this Brookhart Bill.

"I have been an exhibitor for nearly four years and have found that the problems of this industry can be met a great deal easier than those of other industries.

"One method I have adopted is by writing editorials for the local newspapers, educating my public to the different phases of the motion picture industry. In explaining the way I have to buy my pictures in block, they readily understand it and do not blame me so much when I get a poor one.

"By educating them into the phases of this industry, they have developed a confidence in me and stand behind me to such an extent that, at present, I am president of the Rotary Club and Board of Trade in the town.

"The exhibitor is the point of contact between the success and failure of this industry, as he is the fellow that the public spend their money with; and he, in turn, passes it along to the producer, so that if each exhibitor tries to get the confidence of the public it spells success for the whole industry."

We shall publish next week Mr. McLaughlin's statement of opposition to the Brookhart Bill, based upon his experience in another important industry, as well as in this. It is one of the best articles we have ever received and is sound common sense from a successful business man.

Meanwhile, we direct attention to the fact that Mr. McLaughlin is a leader in the life of his community. He's doing his share as one of the real builders of this industry.

J. D. WILLIAMS has won his suit against British National Pictures in London, the defendants consenting to a judgment for a large amount in damages, together with the costs of the action.

Mr. Bevan, K. C., counsel for British National, unreservedly withdrew every allegation and charge against Mr. Williams. The judge concluded the action with personal good wishes for the success which he said Mr. Williams deserved. "Jaydee's" many friends here join heartily in this expression.

WITH the quota movement growing in Europe, it is interesting to learn the entirely different attitude taken by Japan. This is set forth in a letter received from F. L. Herron, of the foreign department of the Hays organization. He writes:

"In view of the fact that so many European countries are now passing laws against importation of foreign pictures, I think the situation in Japan is very interesting.

"Some five years ago, Japan imported 90 per cent of the motion pictures shown in that country. Today not more than 50 per cent are imported, the difference being made up from domestically produced pictures.

"The Japanese form of government has always been widely known as very paternal in its interest in the industries of that country, yet the motion picture industry was left to work out its own salvation. All the state has done is to establish a committee to select pictures which are to be recommended for the purpose of public edification. This shows very plainly how the industry, if it is left alone, can work out its own salvation to the best advantage."

LAST Fall the industry went into a Trade Practice Conference, held under the auspices of the Federal Trade Commission. At this time, the industry, on its own initiative, subscribed to a Code of Ethics and agreed that certain practices were unfair.

The Trade Commission will shortly make public this Code and when it does its provisions will be binding on the whole industry. There will be no exceptions. Regardless of whether or not an organization in the industry subscribes to the Code, it will be binding upon all.

In case of any violations, the Trade Commission is authorized under the law to proceed against violators.

We call attention to this important matter, because it is a practical example of the industry governing itself, by agreement within, and with the enforcing power in the hands of the Government.

Trade practice conferences have been held by the Commission in many industries and such codes have resulted. Without exception, we understand, the codes have been observed after they were promulgated by the Commission.

KANSAS CITY film fans are in a peculiar position insofar as the prospect of seeing "The Circus," the Chaplin film which was shown in virtually all cities around Kansas City and which has been widely heralded, is concerned.

The distributor, it is reported, stipulates that the picture must run at least two weeks and that the price must be 50 cents. The Midland is the only first run house charging as high as 50 cents now and that house will not consent to a run of more than one week. The Newman, which can run a picture more than one week, will not increase its price above 35 cents. As other houses are tied up with contracts it looks as though Kansas City fans will not get to see the picture very soon.

WARNER BROS. have brought to Broadway their "talking movie," "Tenderloin," and however it was received by a sophisticated and not too polite first night audience, they are to be commended for their effort. They have proven that talking scenes add decided novelty and dramatic effect to motion pictures.

There are two of these speaking scenes in the picture.

The first, where Dolores Costello receives the third degree at the police station, gave excellent promise of what the screen voice may do, the sharp staccato voices of the detectives giving just the dramatic intensity aimed at. The sequence could have been shorter.

The next scene was not only altogether too long, but the lines dipped into the old Corse Payton style of ten-twent'-thirt' to such an extent that the action became burlesque. The moral is obvious: the speaking scenes of the movies should be constructed by the best of playwrights.

But the Vitaphone itself again demonstrated that it is remarkable in its technical perfection. This was shown particularly in the rendering of an operatic duet by Gigli and De Luca, which brought great applause from the audience. The other specialty numbers were excellent also.

It was not Vitaphone's fault that the picture dropped into old-style melodrama, which made the audience laugh.

CONSTRUCTIVE work for the whole industry, as done by Tony Sudekum, of the Crescent Amusement Co., Nashville, Tenn., is revealed in the following editorial from the Nashville Banner:

"The relationship that exists between church and theatre in Nashville is at once unusual and commendable, and it marks the striking and fortunate lessening in this community of any spirit of antagonism that may have been in effect between these two powerful agencies in the past.

"It is interesting to note definite examples of the co-operation of the theatres with the churches. Just at present daily Lenten services are being held at the Princess at noon, and the same house has been used for long periods by the First Presbyterian church for evening services on Sunday. The First Baptist also made use of the Princess some time ago while repairs were being made on its plant. McKendree Methodist has used the Capitol for two services on Sunday while its building is being remodeled and McKendree's radio Bible class meets in the same house. For years the Allen Fort Bible Class of the First Baptist with a membership of 800 men has met in the Knickerbocker theatre on Sunday morning, and the Knickerbocker is used by the Lutheran congregations for Lenten services. The Bible class of the Belmont Methodist meets in the Belmont theatre, and still other theatres in the city under the control of Tony Sudekum are used for church purposes whenever the occasion may demand.

"Nashville, as stated above, is fortunate in that Mr. Sudekum is ready to co-operate with the churches. There is no necessity for hostility between the church and the theatre when the latter is properly run, and the situation in Nashville proves the fact most fully and satisfactorily."

Stars to Broadcast Over Big Network; Woodhull Protests

United Artists Announces Program for 55-Station N. B. C. Hook-up for March 29; Attendance Slump Feared by Exhibitors

UNITED ARTISTS officially announced this week the closing of arrangements for an exclusive Dodge Brothers' Hour, Thursday night, March 29, when Norma Talmadge, Charlie Chaplin, Douglas Fairbanks, D. W. Griffith, John Barrymore and Dolores Del Rio will deliver "a special personal entertainment" over 55 radio stations through the National Broadcasting Company's network.

Joseph M. Schenck closed the final arrangements with Dodge Brothers in Hollywood.

A protest against the participation of motion picture stars in national hook-ups of radio stations was filed this week with the Hays organization by R. F. Woodhull, President of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America.

The program willl be broadcast between 9 and 10 p.m., Eastern Standard Time. Paul Whiteman and his band, broadcasting from New York, will be part of the program.

The hook-up was initiated several weeks ago by Victor M. Shapiro, United Artists advertising and publicity director, who carried on negotiations in New York. For Dodge Brothers, negotiations were conducted by Edward L. Bernays, who also is in charge of the physical details. Two trans-continental telephone lines of the American Telegraph and Telephone Company will link the Coast and Eastern stations.

Following Mr. Woodhull's protest to the producers, this statement was issued by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America:

"This action was prompted by the proposal of a program for March 29 similar to the Victory Hour held a short time ago. Before taking this action, Mr. Woodhull wired to exhibitor interests in several parts of the country as soon as he learned of the proposed program. The expressions were against the proposition by a large majority, as the theatre owners have not forgotten the slump in attendance occasioned by the Victory hour, in which Al Jolson, Will Rogers, Fred and Dorothy Stone, and Paul Whiteman participated.

"Mr. Woodhull states that he believes the public understands that the theatre owner is constantly making every effort to entertain by the presentation of stars in motion pictures because it is in that vocation that they are best adapted to be enjoyed.

"The star also should realize that it is wrong to do anything that provides competition to the medium through which they make a living, and Mr. Woodhull further states that he has been assured by many of the producers that they will not encourage any movement that has for its object the appearance of stars before the microphone."

The United Artists announcement says that the stars will each spend a few minutes before the microphone during the period of the broadcast on March 29, speaking from Los Angeles and having their voices relayed over the big network of the N. B. C.

National billboard and newspapers advertising will be massed behind the program by Dodge Brothers. The announcement continues: "Of especial interest to the motion picture industry, besides the fact that this is the celebration of United Artists' Ninth Anniversary as an independent, exclusively big-feature distributing company, and the fact that this is the first all-motion picture program of international importance, will be the stimulation it must afford to the thousands of motion picture theatres playing United Artists' product.

"This stimulation will be afforded directly through the prestige of the stars and of United Artists, as emphasized in the colossal broadcasting stunt. It is also likely that the broadcasting will be directed into several United Artists theatres, as well as into several other large houses throughout the country, if facilities can be made available in time."

D. W. Griffith will be the master of ceremonies. The topics to be discussed by the various stars include, as now planned, current fashions by Norma Talmadge; Charlie Chaplin, studio anecdotes; Douglas Fairbanks, Youth, Health and Strength; John Barrymore, his soliloquy from "Hamlet"; D. W. Griffith, the love motif in photoplay; Dolores Del Rio, a song solo, "Ramona," which has been specially written for her.

Unit Shows for Stanley

Moe Silver to Supervise New Department with Acts Staged by Plunkett, Hyman and Crull

THE Stanley Company has completed plans for the organization of a production department to supply unit shows as presentation features in a number of houses on that circuit. The production activities will be centered in New York under the supervision of Moe Silver, recently installed as managing director of all the theatres controlled by the Stanley organization.

One unit will be released weekly, the shows to be along the line of miniature revues with average casts of 25 entertainers. They will be presented as "band acts," with the conductors of resident bands acting as "Master of Ceremony."

Eight theatres comprise the initial circuit for these unit shows, with the Strand in New York; Branford, Newark; Stanley, Philadelphia; Stanley, Baltimore; Stanley, Pittsburgh; Stanley, Jersey City, and the Earle, in Washington, making up the starting circuit under the new policy.

According to an announcement of the creation of the new department by Irving D. Rossheim, president of Stanley, the circuit will be expanded as the producing facilities develop, and it is expected that a total of 25 weeks' playing time will be reached by July first.

The unit shows will be produced by Joseph Plunkett, Edward Hyman and Harry Crull. Talent will be engaged through the Acme Booking Agency, and the Professional Employment Bureau of the Stanley Company. A scenic and costume department will be maintained in conjunction with the production headquarters in New York.

This move represents an extension of the policy recently tried out in connection with presentations staged at the Brooklyn Strand by Edward Hyman. The acts were traveled as units from Brooklyn to Philadelphia, Washington and from there to Baltimore.

Moe Silver, whose affiliation with the Stanley Company as managing director of theatres was announced this week, was for fourteen years connected with Moe Mark in the latter's operation of the theatres of the Mark-Strand circuit in New England. Silver has established headquarters in the New York office of the company, where all of the details in connection with the direction of his new office will be centralized.

Hays Organization to Formulate Policy

A POLICY will be formulated by the Hays organization regarding radio appearances of screen stars, it was said at the offices of the M. P. P. D. A. this week, when inquiry was made as to whether any action had been taken on the protest filed by R. F. Woodhull, president of the M. P. T. O. A.

No decision has yet been reached, but the question is being considered from all angles, and it is probable that an announcement will be made later.

News' Berlin Correspondent Says "Dawn" Is Not Anti-German

HEINRICH FRAENKEL, Berlin Correspondent of Motion Picture News, sends a report this week on the much-discussed picture, "Dawn," which has been banned by the British Government and is now the subject of heated controversy in Europe. The American rights are held by Arch Selwyn. Distribution here has not been arranged as yet, nor has the picture been shown to the press in America.

"Dawn" deals with the trial and execution of Nurse Cavell in Belgium during the war and was produced by Herbert Wilcox, a British subject, for British and Dominion Films, Ltd.

Mr. Fraenkel is, of course, a German. He writes to Motion Picture News as follows:

"Happening to be in London, at the time of the considerable parliamentary agitation on the 'Cavell picture,' I gladly accepted the producer's offer to view the picture and form my own opinion, the more so as I had thought it grossly unfair to condemn a thing unseen and to suppress, on political grounds, a picture, the treatment of which nobody knew anything about and the theme of which had been announced more than six months ago, quite in time to exercise authoritative pressure, before the picture had been completed with a considerable investment in capital.

"The picture contains nothing to hurt German feelings or any national feeling whatever; it is just a rather sordid document of the cruelty of war and the dramatic conflict between duty and conscience. The story deals with the historical activity of Nurse Cavell smuggling refugees over the frontier. Her conspiracy is detected, she is given a fair trial, condemned to death and executed. That execution scene seems to have been the source of much of the considerable misunderstanding about this picture, before anyone had seen it, Sir Austen Chamberlin having been misinformed about that particular scene by a Government official who was supposed to have seen the picture, but who had not. As a matter of fact, the account of this scene, given in the British Parliament, was entirely erroneous.

"The actual shooting is not seen at all. One of the soldiers in the firing party, refusing to obey orders, is shot by the officer in charge. Nurse Cavell faints. The officer commands 'rest' and 'order arms' and very reluctantly draws his revolver. Here the picture fades out, dissolving into the graves of Nurse Cavell and the German soldier, side by side.

"None of the German characters in the story is by any means hateful; most of them are highly sympathetic indeed, such as the priest, the counsel, a German diplomatist doing his utmost to support the American minister's efforts to save the condemned nurse. The picture is by no means 'anti-German;' it has a most decided pacifistic tendency.

"Technically the production is very good indeed. Miss Thorndike's acting is of the highest standard. Naturally the picture is bound to lack 'entertainment value.' It is just as impressive as it is depressing. And it is a powerful appeal against the terrors of the war machine.

"As I consider it highly expedient and the only fair thing to do for German public opinion to form their own judgment on this picture, which has been the source of so much misunderstanding and political muddling, I have arranged for an early Berlin press show—of the film."

Mr. Fraenkel encloses a copy of a letter to Herbert Wilcox, the producer, which says in part:

"In view of the strong feelings aroused by your picture, before anyone saw it, I am afraid German opinion very much misunderstands the basic idea and trend of your work. I think it would be only fair to give it the chance of being judged on its merits or demerits rather than on mere hearsay.

"I have therefore arranged for your picture to be shown in Berlin. The editor of the German trade paper 'Lichtbildbuhne,' agreeing with me that 'no man should be condemned without a hearing,' has fallen in with my suggestion to exhibit the film in his private theatre to a couple of hundred journalists, M. P.'s, and Government officials.

"As I promised you, I am going to edit personally your film and write the German titles. My fee for this work I want to have handed over in its entirety to war charities, half to any British fund you may choose and the other half to the German 'Kriegshinterliebenenfursorge' (War Orphans Fund)."

Quebec Film Bill Making Progress in Legislature

The Motion Picture Act of the Province of Quebec, under consideration of the Quebec Legislature, has passed its first reading in the Provincial Parliament, and is being presented in amended form for second reading.

A change brought in by Hon. L. A. Taschereau, premier of the Province, who is sponsoring the bill, provides that moving pictures may be presented at school institutions for children under 16 years of age for either educational or recreational purposes when no admission charge is made.

The measure itself prohibits children under the age limit from attending moving picture theatres at all times, whether accompanied by parents or not. The only exception is provided in the amendment, which allows juveniles to see moving pictures in the schools when no admission is charged.

J. A. Cooper Considerably Improved After Accident

Lieut.-Col. J. A. Cooper of Toronto is considerably improved although he will be incapacitated for many days because of the accident which befell him at Regina, Sask., when he was run over by a train, losing a foot and sustaining other injuries.

Col. Cooper is widely known in moving picture, parliamentary, newspaper, club and military circles, and his misfortune has caused much concern.

He is the supervising head of a chain of six film boards of trade in the Dominion and is the Canadian representative of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors Association of New York. He was on a tour of key film cities of Western Canada when he suffered the accident.

Alleged Absconder Jailed in San Francisco

Martin Olsen, former assistant manager of the Pantages Theatre, San Francisco, who is alleged to have disappeared with $4,000 of company funds, has been brought back to San Francisco from Arizona by police. The theatre man was first arrested by Mexican authorities just across the International line. He waived extradition and was taken to the American side and again placed under arrest. He is said to have deposited $2,900 in a Mexican bank, but refuses to withdraw it. Police are also holding his car.

Juvenile Stage Performer Must Return to School

Margaret Muir, 14-year-old performer in the Palace Theatre, Minneapolis, must return to school, District Judge Thomas Salmon decided this week in denying a motion for an injunction made by her parents against the board of education. The parents sought to restrain the school board from interfering with the girl's theatrical career. The action, which developed under the state's child labor law, interested many exhibitors in Minneapolis who frequently employ children in their stage revues.

Kennedy To Be Pathe President?

Rumor Persists Regarding New Chief and Also That De Mille Will Sign With United Artists

RUMORS continue apace with the activities between FBO and Pathe, which it is thought might bring about a merger of the two companies now having a mutuality of interests through the tieup with the Keith-Albee-Orpheum combination. Speculation has been rife for some time as to the possibility of Joseph P. Kennedy, president of FBO, succeeding to the presidency of Pathe. Rumors have been current for some time regarding the possibility of the resignation of Elmer R. Pearson from the Pathe organization, and added to that now is the rumor that Cecil B. De Mille will be through with Pathe when his current picture is concluded, at which time it is said he will be placed under contract by United Artists.

Just how many of these rumors will eventuate into facts is largely conjectural. They have been emphasized as rumors with the arrival of Mr. Kennedy on the coast, where Pathe is undergoing reorganization. He is overseeing the production forces with the idea of reducing overhead to a point where the individual pictures may be placed on a paying basis. It is reported that production costs in the past have reached such proportions that a profit on pictures was practically an impossibility.

Mr. Kennedy and Mr. De Mille are reported in conference on the coast with regard to lowering of production costs. Substantiating somewhat the rumor regarding Mr. De Mille's possible withdrawal from Pathe is the report that department heads at the De Mille studio have been ordered to discharge employees following completion of work on current pictures.

On the other hand, it is said Mr. De Mille holds a contract which still has considerable time to run and it may be that readjustments with the De Mille forces will not be possible until that contract has expired. Some rumors are to the effect that De Mille is to continue with the company with Mr. Kennedy carefully overseeing production costs and keeping them to the lowest possible figure.

The withdrawal of Mr. Pearson, which has been rumored for some time, is now thought not likely to materialize into fact in the immediate future, as he was called to the coast Monday of this week by Mr. Kennedy to take a leading part in the reorganization of Pathe. A report was published before Mr. Pearson's last return from the coast that he was withdrawing from the company, but this latest call minimizes the likelihood of this action.

The report regarding Mr. Kennedy's ascendency to the presidency of Pathe, however, continues to persist, though he announced when going to the coast that he was doing so in an advisory capacity in an endeavor to lower the high costs of production.

It is thought likely in many quarters that Pathe and FBO will eventually be merged because of their connection with the Keith-Albee-Orpheum organization. K-A-O has an interest in both Pathe and FBO, and its theatres, which heretofore have been the outlet for Pathe product, now are to be made available to FBO as well.

From Los Angeles comes the word that United Artists are still dickering with De Mille, despite the fact that the latter has denied emphatically that he intends severing his connections with Pathe. It is believed on the coast that Mr. De Mille's present picture will be his last for Pathe, though negotiations with the United Artists have not yet reached the contract signing stage, it is believed.

During Mr. Kennedy's absence on the coast, Colvin Brown, one of FBO's vice-presidents, is handling matters at the home office of the company in New York.

Seek Relief in French Market

Decree Makes Necessary U. S. Purchase of $1,000,000 of French Film to Continue Business on Past Scale

ACCORDING to a copyrighted cable printed in the New York Times, the United States Department of Commerce is making a serious effort to relieve American film companies of the embarassment in which the new French Government cinema decree has placed them.

The Times dispatch says that acting upon cabled instructions from the Department of Commerce, Henry C. Mac Lean, Commercial Attache of the Paris Embassy conferred last Saturday with Edouard Herriott, Minister of Public Instruction, relative to the matter. Mac Lean was accompanied by Colonel Edward Lowry, European representative of the Hays organization.

M. Herriott, who directed the drawing up of the new censorship regulations, informed Mac Lean, according to the Times, that it was "not the purpose of the decree to harm any foreign interest, but rather to protect and build up the home film industry. A policy of mutual cooperation between American film interests and French film companies would be productive of the best results for all concerned, he said."

Going further into detail with regard to the application of quotas, the Times says:

"The result of these representations bears out an impression in well-informed film circles, where it is believed that American companies operating in the French market will find it necessary to purchase somewhere in the neighborhood of $1,000,000 worth of French films yearly in order to continue business on a scale comparable with that of recent years.

"Since the French market nets less than $1,000,000 annually, it will be seen that future profits from France may be derived solely from the exploitation of French-made films in the United States.

"Article 4 of the decree under which the new film commission, among other considerations such as national customs, morals and prestige, is to be guided by facilities provided by foreign countries for showing French films,' will, in the opinion of American experts abroad be the basis of the commission's inquiry. Instead, therefore, of having abandoned the project of giving seven visas for every French film purchased, the new regulations will adjust the number of visas in accordance with the amount of money invested by American companies in French production. Thus, if a French film concern sells one of its productions to Germany for $10,000, and to the United States for $50,000, the American buyer will receive more visas than the German.

"It is estimated that American firms will need about 200 visas to maintain their rate of export for the 1928-1929 season, although 368 American films were released in France last year. Of these, 101 were sold outright by independents and the remainder were distributed by American distributors with offices in France."

From Paris comes the further word that approximately 300 American pictures are being held up waiting the pleasure of the censorship board. None of the new season's product has yet been passed by the board. It is within the power of the commission to delay indefinitely passage of American pictures and it is thought in some quarters this lack of action indicates a means of securing better reciprocity in America for French pictures.

The Department of Commerce has made a resume of the French motion picture situation for 1927, which shows substantial headway was made in cinema construction during the year, and the cinema holdings of leading American film companies increased in importance.

Of the 368 American films censored during 1927, 101 were distributed by French companies, an indication that the films of so-called independent American companies found a good market in France. Four American companies distributing their own product in France handled 15 foreign films during the year under review.

Rembusch Hits Contract

Says New Document Is No Better Than Old and Urges Inquiry By Senate Committee

FRANK J. REMBUSCH, secretary of the unaffiliated exhibitor group at the Trade Practice Conference, is out with a statement that the new contract adopted at the Chicago meeting is no better than the old, and that a strict and rigorous investigation by a Senate committee is needed to remove the whitewash of the entire industry. He has addressed a communication to exhibitors regarding the matter. Rembusch says:

"Last July the 'Cease and Desist' order of the Federal Trade Commission was not complied with. The commission held a meeting of the industry in October in New York, and an agreement was reached between both sides that a new contract, correcting the present unfair trade practices, would be created for the coming season. The new contract is here and it is no better than the old. It was agreed that no one unaffiliated with producers would serve on the unaffiliated side. It was agreed that the unit rule would be followed absolutely by the Unaffiliated members of the contract committee, so that the seventh arbitrator would be necessary. Our members pledged us at Chicago to follow the unit rule and that disputed points would go before the seventh arbitrator. The meeting was behind closed doors when we thought it should be open. We are informed that the vote was more often five to one than any other. One person who had no vote was very drastic and a better contract would have been made without this person interfering. It was agreed at the commission conference in New York that the independents would have a right to approve or reject the contract before it is in force. The new contract has compulsory arbitration that no other industry has. This contract was made under Government suggestion and concerns the investments and property rights of many citizens.

"The independent exhibitors, who allege they are working for the rights of the unaffiliated independent exhibitors and who vote one day against, and the next day for, compulsory arbitration and against block booking and who do everything they can to keep the present system in vogue, are particularly guilty of 'spoofing.'

"These and the entire industry need their whitewash removed. The whole set-up is such that a strict and rigorous senatorial investigation is being asked for so that the compulsory arbitration and the violent advocates of the present set-up may more fully explain themselves and we hope that no one will have to say 'Good Morning, Judge.' Film Concern Fakir Said to Be Located in Canada

"Dr." Orlando E. Miller, wanted on a charge of using the United States mails to defraud, was reported located in Winnipeg, Canada, recently. Unverified rumors reaching Federal authorities in San Francisco were to the effect that the self-styled psychologist and promoter and alleged perpetrator of a $300,000 fraud scheme in connection with the defunct Rellimeo Film Company, is conducting a series of health and success lectures in the province of Manitoba.

The United States marshal in San Francisco holds a warrant for Miller's arrest, and if the report that he is in Winnipeg proves correct, efforts will be made to extradite him.

Warrants have also been issued for Mrs. Lillian Granville White, former secretary of the Rellimeo Film Company; F. Ellis Miller, Oakland business man; and F. G. Collett. These were issued some time ago, but held secret pending location of Miller.

Quebec Film Bodies to Oppose Legislation

The Theatre and Cinema Association of the Province of Quebec has been organized under the laws of Quebec, with headquarters at Montreal, for exhibitors of all Quebec cities and towns, for the purpose of opposing the serious measures which are now up before the Quebec Legislature. These legislative proposals include the closing of theatres on Sundays and a ban on the admission of all children under 16 years of age to moving picture theatres in the Province, even when accompanied by adults.

The Retail Merchants Association of Canada has extended its active support to the campaign against Sunday closing, while the labor unions also want Sunday shows.

John M. Casey Boston's Censor for 25 Years

John M. Casey, for twenty-five years official censor of Boston, continues his popularity among theatrical folk of the country. When he arrived at his office Wednesday, on the occasion of the anniversary, he found huge floral tributes and other gifts from theatrical people, exhibitors and exchanges of New England, and from many friends in other professions.

Mr. Casey was once a member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. When the law placed licensing power in the hands of Boston, Mayor Patrick Collins named John M. for the job. While administrations and party politics have changed many times since, John M. continues to hold the fort.

As licensing commissioner of Boston, Casey collected just a little more than $850 his first year in office in fees. Last year the fees amounted to more than $60,000.

"U" Completing Purchase of "Sutter's Gold"

Universal expects to complete arrangements in the near future for the purchase of the screen rights to "Sutter's Gold," a story of the California gold-rush days by Blaise Candrars, a French novelist, translated into English by Henry Longan Stuart. The story will be used as a starring vehicle for Jean Hersholt, it is thought. The French novel was published last season in the Cosmopolitan Magazine under the title of "The Days of '49." It has also been published in book form by Harpers. It is likely that the picture will be released under the title "The Richest Man on Earth."

"Modern Du Barry," Ufa Film, to Play Colony

"A Modern Du Barry," a Ufa production being handled by Brill Distributing Corporation, will play at the Colony theatre in New York the week of March 17th. Maria Corda is the featured player.

Colleen Moore Renews First National Contract

AFTER the termination of her existing contract, Colleen Moore has signed to remain as a First National star for another year. As in the past, her vehicles will be produced for First National by John McCormick, who has also been retained on a new contract.

According to the terms of Miss Moore's contract, the star will appear in four productions in addition to those which have already been announced. She has just finished "Lilac Time," and will follow it with "Heart to Heart" and will then make "Oh Kay."

Provinces Do Not Want Unified Censorship

HON. A. M. MANSON of Vancouver, B. C., Attorney-General of the Province of British Columbia, has found out that the other Provinces of the Dominion do not want Federal censorship of moving pictures. Even his proposal for unified censorship of films in the four Western Provinces of Canada has been frowned upon by Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba.

Hon. Mr. Manson launched a movement to abolish the present system of film censorship, in which pictures are reviewed in each of nine Provinces before they are presented in the respective jurisdictions, in order to effect economies in cost, time and labor for the governments, the film exchanges and the theatres. British Columbia offered to go more than half way in the matter as a start. But the proposal has not been favorably received, he announced March 10.

Mr. Manson admitted that Dominion control of moving pictures seemed to be out of the question because the other Provinces, particularly Quebec, preferred their own systems.

Appeal for New Trial in Baltimore Test Case

A motion was filed Wednesday, March 7th, in the Criminal Court in Baltimore, for a new trial in the test case involving John G. Callan, Charles F. Mules and Walter Stierhoff, who were charged with giving a motion picture performance recently in a Baltimore theatre to test the Sunday Blue Laws of that city.

They were found guilty by a grand jury on all charges made in the case in which they were tried. They ask for a new trial, contending that the Criminal Court of Baltimore has no jurisdiction under Section 483, Article 29, of the Code of Public General Laws; that Article 27, of the same section, applies only to counties of the state, and not to Baltimore City; that Frederick R. Huber was not permitted to testify; that the state attorney told the jury that Defendant Callan was a member of the Legislature in 1920, this not having been, they say, the case; that the verdict is against the evidence. Other reasons are also advanced by the defendants for a new trial.

Cruze to Direct "Excess Baggage" for M-G-M

James Cruze will direct Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's screen version of "Excess Baggage," an adaptation of the current Broadway stage play by John McGowan, now in its fourth month at the Ritz Theatre in New York. Haines will start work on the new film as soon as he has completed "He Learned About Women."

Corinne Griffith to Star in "Outcast"

"Outcast," the stage play by Hubert Henry Davies in which Elsie Ferguson starred, will be Corinne Griffith's second stellar picture for First National, under her new contract. The screen version is being prepared by Agnes Christine Johnston.

Stanley Company Report Shows Banner Year

Rossheim Announces Organization Will Lease Houses Instead of Acquiring New Properties

IN announcing the consolidated balance sheet of the Stanley Company of America for 1927 the company reveals a number of interesting figures and details. Among these is a statement from Irving D. Rossheim, recently elected president of the company, to the effect that they will, for the time being, lease theatres rather than acquire additional real estate holdings.

In the report, Mr. Rossheim says:

"Having already acquired the ownership of many valuable sites in the most desirable mtropolitan centers, efforts for a time will be concentrated upon the acquisition of theatres by lease rather than by adding to the company's real estate holdings. It is to be noted, however, that the real estate which has been previously purchased has increased in value, and although this is not reflected in the balance sheet, in which the fixed assets are recorded at cost, the difference in value which actually exists creates a very material hidden reserve."

The gross income of the company, revealed by the statement for the year 1927, sets a new high record of $37,060,024, contributed by 100,000,000 theatre patrons. The total income for 1926 was $22,909,812.

Net earnings of the company, before depreciation and U. S. taxes, totaled $5,479,668, and the balance available for dividends, after depreciation and taxes, amounted to $3,293,582. After payment of $3,181,089 in dividends, a surplus of $112,493 for the year remained.

The consolidated balance sheet of the Stanley Company of America and subsidiaries as of December 31st, 1927, shows current assets of $7,660,091, compared with current liabilities of $827,623. The value of properties owned is listed at $57,089,234 and the value of properties leased is placed at $12,087,736. Investments are carried at $4,693,223.

The Stanley Company of America and its subsidiaries own, operate, control and participate in the operation of 255 theatres, with a seating capacity of over 350,000. The theatres are grouped as follows:

	No. of Theatres
Stanley Company of America.........	130
Stanley-Fabian Corporation...........	63
Stanley-Davis-Clark Corporation	31
Stanley-Crandall Co., of Washington..	20
Stanley-Mark-Strand Corporation	11

Of these, 249 are in actual operation and 7 in the course of construction. They are located in 75 cities in 7 states and the District of Columbia, comprising a territory of 195,000 square miles, with a fixed population of approximately 13,000,000 and a potential drawing capacity of 27,000,000 people.

Reviewing the 1927 operations, Mr. Rossheim explained that in the early part of the year, 125,237 shares of stock were issued and the net proceeds, amounting to $8,000,000, were used for the liquidation of current indebtedness, the acquisition of additional theatre chains and the company's construction program. Among the large theatres completed during the year were the Erlanger and Wynne in Philadelphia and the Stanley theatre in Baltimore. New theatres are now under construction in Philadelphia and Pittsburgh, Pa., Hoboken, Jersey City and Bridgeton, New Jersey, and in Utica, New York.

F. C. Hinds Planning a Circuit in Iowa

A CHAIN of small town theatres throughout Iowa is the plan of Fred C. Hinds, veteran exhibitor, who is forming a $250,000 company for the expansion. In very small towns the projctionist will be the house manager and will be responsible for the theatre's success. For several years Mr. Hinds has been operating the Cresco Theatre in Cresco, Ia.

Mr. Hinds was recently offered the Plaza at Waterloo and the Orpheum at Clinton, both former Alexander Frank houses which, it is reported, have been taken over by A. H. Blank.

Los Angeles Woman Wins $15,000 Idea Contest

Rena Vale, former saleswoman of hosiery in a Los Angeles office building, has been announced winner of the first prize of the Paramount-Photoplay Magazine contest for valuable story ideas. Frank Capra Signed to New Columbia Contract

Columbia Pictures has exercised its option on Frank Capra's services and signed the director to a long-term contract. A clause in the contract provides that every feature made by the director is to be billed as "A Frank Capra Production." The signing of the contract followed the completion of "The Matinee Idol." Capra has been loaned by Columbia to Metro-Goldywn-Mayer to direct a Karl Dane-George K. Arthur comedy. Immediately upon the finish of the latter piece he will return to the Columbia lot.

Publix Opens Seattle

Magnificent New $1,500,000 House Has Dedicatory Program Before Notables

MARKING the beginning of a new era in the motion picture field on the Pacific Coast by the introduction of Publix Theatres, Inc., as an operating organization in that territory, the magnificent new $1,500,000 Seattle Theatre opened its doors to the public of Seattle, Washington, last week. With the opening of this new house, Publix now becomes a big factor in the Pacific Coast theatre field, as the Seattle opening marked the beginning of the presentation of complete Publix stage and screen shows at the Seattle Theatre, the new Portland Theatre in Portland, the Granada Theatre in San Francisco and the Metropolitan Theatre in Los Angeles.

The opening program at the 3,500 seat Seattle Theatre was little short of a sensation.

The program proper opened with "Selections from Faust" played by the 20-piece Seattle Grand Orchestra, directed by John Barbour. This was followed by "Memories," a Tiffany Color Classic with special musical score by the orchestra. "News of the Day" was made up of selected shots from the latest Paramount News reels, also accompanied by the orchestra. Following this came an organ specialty on the $100,000 gold and ivory Wurlitzer, presided over by Ron Baggot and Don Moore as a duet. Then Jules Buffano, master of ceremonies, introduced the Seattle Stage Band of 20 pieces and the opening Publix presentation, "Merry Widow Revue," direct from the Chicago Theatre at Chicago. The program ended with the screening of Bebe Daniels in "Feel My Pulse."

In attendance at the opening, in addition to many state and city officials, were Ralph E. Crabill, supervising director of Publix Theatres on the Pacific Coast; E. J. Zukor, assistant to the president of the Famous Lasky Paramount company; Sam Denbow, vice-president of Publix; Harold B. Franklin, president and general manager of West Coast Theatres, Inc.; Jeff Lazarus, publicity director for the West Coast circuit; Marco, of the Fanchon-Marco producing company; and several parties of Publix and West Coast executives.

The Seattle Theatre, as well as the other Pacific Coast houses, will be operated by West Coast Theatres, Inc., for Publix-Loew associated, but in reality is a distinct Publix house, with Publix service, staff employees, advertising and operation.

First National Cutters Clearing Up Schedule

The schedule of the cutters and film editors at First National's Burbank plant is being cleared of all productions that have been finished, but which have not yet gone to the exchanges. The latest film to enter the cutting stage is "Lilac Time." Work has been finished on "Three-Ring Marriage," "The Big Noise" and "Chinatown Charlie." The scissors force is now working on "The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come," "Vamping Venus," "Lady, Be Good," and "Harold Teen."

Last week on the First National lots, "The Hawk's Nest," Milton Sills' new picture, was placed in production. Alexander Korda has returned to directing Billie Dove in "The Yellow Lily," Ken Maynard is acting initial scenes in "The Code of the Scarlet," his first Northwest Mounted Police role. Corinne Griffith is scheduled to begin soon "The Divine Lady." "The Whip," "Roulette," a new Harry Langdon comedy; "The Butter and Egg Man" and "The Boss of Little Arcady," are also destined for production in the very near future.

Fox Will Make Hungarian Film, Talley Directing

In Budapest, where he will ultimately arrive after a swing through the Fox Films offices in Rome, Vienna, Berlin, Paris and London, Truman Talley, director-in-chief of Fox News and Fox Varieties, who sailed last week on the S.S. Roma for the continent, will direct a picture of Hungarian national life, using a native cast and the facilities of Fox News in Hungary.

His purpose for the trip is the reorganization of the Fox cameramen stationed abroad. Mr. Taley expects to be finished with his project and return to New York around May 15; Mrs. Talley is accompanying him.

Relief in French Market Sought by U. S.

Four large French educational films and 303 short subjects, of which 190 were short comedies, 109 educational shorts, and four classified by the French censorship as "Films of short meterage" (but which were similar enough to be considered as short educational films) were censored during 1927.

The 190 short comedies were all of American make, while 76 of the remaining 113 short educational subjects were of French manufacture. The consumption of short comedies, incidentally, decreased during 1927 by 29.6 per cent under the figures of th previous year. The loss, of course, was to the American trade.

Nine M-G-M Features in Production at Studio

Nine new films are in work at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studio and a similar number are scheduled to get under way before the end of the month.

During the past week photography was started on three new films: "The Dancing Girl," "Diamond Handcuffs" and "Under the Black Eagle." Six pictures previously in production at the studio were: Marion Davies' new vehicle, "He Learned About Women," a new story for Lew Cody and Aileen Pringle, Tim McCoy's new western, "Detectives" and "Southern Skies."

Before the end of the month has arrived it is expected by M-G-M officials that the following films will be in work also: "Chinatown," Lon Chaney's next picture; "Four Walls," a new John Gilbert vehicle; "Tide of Empire," in which Norman Kerry will be the male lead; a Javanese story to star Greta Garbo; "Excess Baggage," to star William Haines; an adventure story to be directed by Victor Seastrom; "Her Cardboard Lover," to star Marion Davies," and "The Baby Cyclone," which will co-star Lew Cody and Aileen Pringle.

Columbia Has Three Units Shooting at the Studio

Three producing units are shooting at the picture plant of Columbia on the Coast. Three more units are preparing to launch work on as many productions, and one film is in the cutting room.

Frank Capra has completed the cutting and editing of "The Matinee Idol." Walter Lang has entered the final stage of camera work on "The Desert Bride." Fred Windemere is directing a cabaret sequence of "Broadway Daddies," George B. Seitz is to leave shortly on an extended location trip for the filming of "After the Storm," a sea picutre, for which Charles Delaney and Eugenia Gilbert will be the romantic leads.

Warner Bros. Planning to Produce Abroad

SEVERAL of the pictures for the 192-29 schedule of Warner Bros. will be produced in European circles, information from Albert Warner, vice-president of the company, reveals. The Warner production chiefs, H. M. Warner, president, and Jack L. Warner, are now in Europe completing plans which were first started when Darryl Francis Zanuck made his recent trip to England.

At least three productions will be made in Great Britain, it is said, as well as several on the continent. Arthur Clavering, managing director of Warner Bros.' London headquarters, will supervise the work to be done in England. At the present time it is said that the Warners are also negotiating for the acquisition of a studio in Berlin.

Louis Auerbach Dies From Paralytic Stroke

AFTER a brief illness, Louis Auerbach, vice-president of Export and Import Film Co., Inc., died Monday, March 12, in Atlantic City, where he had gone from New York last week to recuperate. Funeral services were held at Campbell's Funeral Parlors, New York City at ten o'clock Thursday morning, March 15. He is survived by his wife, Tina Marie Auerbach, and a son, Warren. He went to bed last Friday and never got up again.

Louis Auerbach became associated with Ben Blumenthal, president of Export and Import Film Company, sixteen years ago in the year 1912. These two met in Europe, and the former came on to New York City about two years later, and has since been in charge of the New York office. Mr. Auerbach became one of the most prominent figures in the export trade and had a wide circle of friends in the industry.

Previous to his association with Mr. Blumenthal, Mr. Auerbach was occupied with the Boston firm of Thomas Lawson's, and was also connected with a company organized by the father-in-law of Jules Bache. Like his father, he was born in Philadelphia, where the Auerbach family were old residents. He later married Tina Marie Seitz, who came from old New England stock.

Columbia Sets "Matinee Idol" as March Release

''The Matinee Idol'' has been chosen by Columbia as its second release for March. The new picture, adapted from ''Come Back to Aaron,'' and Frank Capra's third production for Columbia, co-stars Bessie Love and Johnnie Walker.

Sapiro Organization Set

N. Y. Independent Motion Picture Exhibitors Assn. Will Start Cooperative Buying Next Week

THE Independent Motion Picture Exhibitors Association, Inc., with Aaron Sapiro serving as its president, will probably be ready for actual functioning next week. Sapiro is said to have signed a contract binding him to the presidency with a salary said to approximate $100,000 a year. The exhibitor members of the association, it is said, will pay 5 per cent of their film rentals to maintain the organization.

Incorporation papers for the new organization were due to arrive from Albany this week, and offices, it is said, will be leased in the new Ampico Building, at Fifth Avenue and 47th street.

This new exhibitor cooperative association will control $2,500,000 in annual film rentals. A general meeting of the exhibitors now affiliated, or about to become affiliated, will be held next week, at which time directors will be selected.

While many of the large New York circuits have already signed as members of the organization, it is anticipated by those in a position to know, that several additional circuits that are not now enrolled will be added to the membership lists before the meeting next week. This will give them a voice in the selection of directors.

The story to the effect that some of the larger producing and distributing companies might ban the new organization as an organization, is not worrying the members to any extent. With contracts signed with circuits representing more than 125 theatres, and with the buying power they control, they have no fear regarding a sufficient supply of product.

Sapiro is said to have been in conference with many leading executives in the distribution field, and is satisfied there will be little, if any, opposition to his buying plan.

"U" Shifts Sales Force

Metzger Announces Important Re-alignment Effecting N. Y. and Key City Chiefs

LOU B. METZGER, general sales manager for Universal, announces a considerable shifting of the sales forces of the organization, with several high positions in the Universal home office effected, as well as a number in the important key cities. The re-alignment in the New York territory is announced as being due to changed conditions in the way of mergers, combinations and impending combinations.

Earl Kramer, eastern sales manager, will in the future confine himself to the New York territory as general manager of the Big U Exchange. Ted Schlanger, who has been Sales Manager of Short Subjects and Complete Service for Universal, now becomes Eastern sales manager. Morris Joseph, who has been at the head of the Big U Exchange, returns to his former post as head of the New Haven Exchange.

Schlanger's post as short subjects sales manager is taken over by Ben Y. Cammack, who has been serving as Atlanta branch manager.

Several other shifts are embraced in the re-arrangement. Leo Abrams, who followed Morris Joseph into the managerial chair of the New Haven exchange, is to take over the important post of St. Louis manager. M. Gottlieb, the former manager, has resigned.

Harry Millstein, manager of Universal's Salt Lake City exchange, is also among the list of promotions. He wins a bigger and more important exchange, being shifted to Minneapolis, to replace Mark Ross, resigned. His position as Salt Lake manager will be filled by A. W. (Tony) Hartford, Salt Lake's star salesman, and twice winner of the Carl Laemmle sales efficiency award.

''The current changes in the Universal sales force have been made along the lines of Mr. Laemmle's established policy of 'Promotion within the ranks,' '' Metzger explained, following his announcement of the changes. ''These young men, who are getting positions of more importance and trust, have earned promotion by their loyalty to Universal.

Sen. Dill Writes Exhibitor He Will Help Brookhart Bill

SENATOR C. C. DILL, member of the Interstate Commerce Committee at Washington, and Representative Sam B. Hill, Congressman, both from the State of Washington, are reported favorable to the passage of the Brookhart Bill. They are said to have expressed themselves to that effect in letters to D. H. Mangone of the Rex Theatre at Newport, Washington.

Senator Dill is said to have written: "As a member of the Interstate Commerce Committee, I should be glad to help report it to the Senate and pass it if possible."

Representative Hill said he favors "the character of legislation proposed by such a measure."

Judge Reverses Censors' Decision; Allows Picture Showing

A DECISION of importance which deals a heavy blow to censor boards was rendered by Judge A. B. Pittman of the Circuit Court, sitting in Memphis, Tennessee, when he decided over the ruling of the local board that the photoplay, "The King of Kings," should be allowed to play at the Lyric Theatre without police interference.

The court held there is nothing in the screen version of the life of Christ that is likely to stir up religious or racial hatred or prove inimical to public welfare.

Judge Pittman's opinion set a precedent for Tennessee in that it held a court of law was empowered with authority to review the actions of any censor board and pass final judgment as to whether a drama, film or act was good or bad from a standpoint of public welfare and safety.

New Theatre Corporation

Fischers Paramount Organized to Build and Acquire Many Additional Houses

FISCHERS PARAMOUNT THEATRES CORPORATION, recently organized under the laws of the state of Delaware, has taken over the assets of Fischers Paramount Theatres, Incorporated, an Illinois Corporation, and has contracted with George M. Forman & Company for $1,400,000 in bonds to cover the erection of five new theatres.

It is also the intention of the new corporation to acquire leases and construct theatres in the states of Illinois, Indiana and Ohio. The five theatres contracted for under the arrangement with George M. Forman & Company are all to be located in Wisconsin. In addition to constructing these five houses, additional houses will be built in Merrill, Wisconsin Rapids, West Bend, Rhinelander, West Allis, Ft. Fischer is president and general manager of the new corporation and will direct its operation.

"Circus" Contracts Not Invalid, Board Rules

IN an action brought by Joelson-Suchman circuit against United Artists in relation to a contract on "The Circus," recent United Artists release, the validity of all contracts on the Chaplin film were upheld by the New York arbitration board. The board approved the arguments brought out for the validity of the agreement by Lewis N. Nizer, counsel for the distributing organization. Harry Suchman represented the plaintiff.

The exhibitors contended that, as delivery had not been made one year from Aug. 24, 1926, the date of signing the contract, it was invalid. Nizer contended that a year had not elapsed, so far as validity is concerned, as the contract time limit is a year from exhibition date of the first photoplay, and that the agreement specified the date as seven days after competing Loew's houses in the Bronx.

He further pointed out that a fire delayed production from October to December, 1926, and that 11 months of delay, beyond control of the producer, should be deducted. He also cited Clause 18, stating that had the year elapsed, which he did not admit, cancellation must be entered by either party, within 100 days after such elapsed time.

Educational Activity Curtails Vacation Plans

EDUCATIONAL'S production schedule is keeping the production units at the Educational studio so busy that it has been found necessary to modify the plans for the usual spring vacation. Instead of a complete shutdown for several weeks before starting on the work for the 1928-29 series, the studio will be kept partly open straight through the usual vacation period.

Although the work is rapidly nearing a close on most of the comedy series, it will require several weeks to complete the present series of six two-reel Bowers Comedies. Consequently, it is now being planned to keep Bowers and his unit working right through the spring. Bowers did not begin making his comedies until much later than the other Educational units. He should be starting on his fifth comedy in this series this week.

Norma Taurog has completed his final pictures on his production schedule, while Stephen Roberts is rounding out his schedule of Mermaid Comedies. Charles Lamont is directing his final Big Boy-Juvenile Comedy on this season's program. Camera work has been finished on the Lloyd Hamilton, Lupino Lane, Dorothy Devore and Tuxedo Comedy series, and the final Cameo Comedy is virtually completed.

U. A. Enters Tenth Year

Company Boasts Notable Record of Achievement Since Organization in April, 1919

UNITED ARTISTS CORPORATION enters its tenth year of operation as a releasing organization on April 5th. It was founded in 1919 on that date by Mary Pickford, Charles Chaplin, Douglas Fairbanks and David Wark Griffith. The historical record of the company which has been compiled in booklet form shows some unique achievements.

During the nine years of existence of the company only four additional owner-members have been added to the corporation. They are Joseph M. Schenck, Norma Talmadge, Gloria Swanson and Samuel Goldwyn. These, with the four founders, comprise the whole owner-membership.

The record of the company shows that in nine years only 75 pictures have been released for 29 producers, an average of eight productions annually. The four founders in the nine years have released only 35 productions, an average of one film per producer a year.

Of the 75 pictures released by the company 36 have been based on stories written directly for the screen, 29 on novels and short stories, 9 on stage plays, and 1 on a song, "Little Annie Rooney."

No less than 17 United Artists pictures have been exhibited at $2 prices in Broadway "legitimate" theatres, and 40 other United Artists pictures have played extended run engagements of from two to five weeks in key city first run motion picture theatres at regular prices.

During the three years after March, 1925, when Joseph M. Schenck was elected chairman of the Board of Directors of the company, 22 major stars, directors and producers of films became associated with United Artists pictures. This list includes Norma Talmadge, Gloria Swanson, Samuel Goldwyn, Lillian Gish, Corinne Griffith, Vilma Banky, Constance Talmadge, Dolores del Rio, John Barrymore, Ronald Colman, Rudolph Valentino, Buster Keaton, Duncan Sisters, Gilda Gray, Walter Camp, Jr., Morris Gest, Edwin Carewe, Herbert Brenon, Henry King, Fred Niblo, Rex Ingram and Howard Hughes, Jr.

Ontario Tax Runs High

Government Collects $1,729,734.21 from Theatres and Amusements During Year

THE Ontario Government collected $1,729,734.21 from the theatres of the Province and from the amusement patrons during the last fiscal year, according to the annual statement of the Provincial Treasurer's Department, which has just been presented for the Legislative Assembly at Toronto.

The theatre ticket tax provided a revenue during the 12 months of $1,567,630.48, while theatre license fees collected by the Government amounted to $78,365.24. Road shows contributed a total of $19,147.09 during the fiscal period.

The annual report shows that the Ontario Board of Moving Picture Censors derived a revenue of $37,837.60 in fees for the censorship of reels during the term. The Ontario Government Motion Picture Bureau also secured revenue to the extent of $26,753.80 from rentals of the official releases. This bureau has offices at Toronto while the studio is at Trenton, Ontario.

The motion picture bureau caused an expenditure of $121,516.40 to the Provincial Government during the 12 months. This amount was made up as follows: Raw film, photographic supplies, equipment, maintenance, etc., $89,073.95; salaries, $21,238.25; contingencies, $11,204.20. There was, therefore, an excess of expense over revenue of $94,762.60 but there was much in the way of indirect gain through the use of the Ontario Government pictures in many countries of the world for advertising purposes.

There will be no changes in taxation in the Province of Ontario, either up or down, during 1928.

Exhibitor Wins Stay in Warner Case, Already Twice Aired

THE Warner arbitration case with Waldo C. Ives, an Anacortes, Washington, exhibitor, has again been revived through the issuance of a temporary injunction granted the exhibitor, by which Ives takes the case to court.

This will mark the third airing of the matter. Ives originally contended Warners had made substitutions in product sold them through a salesman's campaign book, while Warners countered that the contract specified titles only. At the first hearing the arbitration board decided in favor of the exhibitor. Warners appealed the decision and the second board decision was in their favor.

Ives in securing the temporary injunction and taking the case to court now contends that the first decision should stand and alleges the second board had no jurisdiction in the case. No date for the hearing of the appeal has yet been set.

Universal Pictures Six Months Ahead of Date

CAMERA work on this year's Universal features was completed this week at the Universal City studio. Universal's production activities are exactly six months ahead of release date, it is said. Of the 60 or more features scheduled to reach the screen during the 1927-28 season, but four remain to be shipped east. These are now in the final cutting and editing stages and are expected to arrive at the New York office within a week or so.

They are "We Americans," one of Universal's special productions; "Good Morning, Judge," formerly titled "Be Yourself;" "Hot Heels" and "A Society Cowboy."

Projector Experts Lecture at Managers Institute

P. A. McGuire and A. E. Meyer, advertising manager and export manager, respectively, of the International Projector Co., were speakers at the sessions of the Moving Picture Theatre Managers Institute on Friday evening, March 2.

Mr. McGuire dwelt at length on the creation of good-will between manager and projectionist.

Maintenance of equipment and common faults of projection were the subjects covered by Mr. Meyer. He stressed in great detail the practices of the more successful theatres and suggested additional rules to insure best results.

Legion Membership Drive Sponsored by Theatre

Cooperative Campaign for Post and Presentation of "Legionaires in Paris" Conducted by H. A. Jones

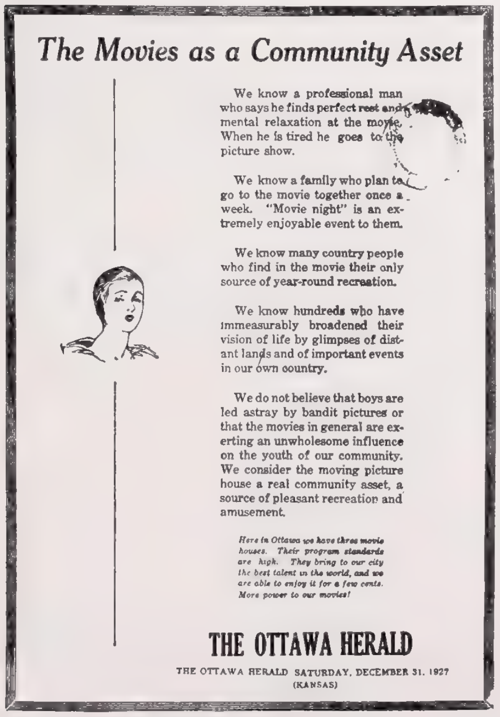
H. A. JONES, manager of the Midland theatre, in Carthage, Mo., exploited "Legionaires in Paris" to such advantage when it playd the Crane theatre, in Carthage, recently that he not only increased business for the theatre, but was also successful in getting new members for the Edwin W. Wiggins Post No. 9.

Jones is a legionaire past commander of Sedalia Post. He attended the regular meeting of the Post and invited the members to see the picture as his guests. He also succeeded in having them postpone the opening of their membership drive so that it ran concurrently with the picture. All advertising matter carried both the name of the theatre and the date on which it was scheduled to play, with considerable space devoted to the details of the membership drive of the Post. This resulted in the Legion members putting out the window cards and getting them into windows that the theatre could not reach, and in windows that never before carried theatre cards.

At Mr. Jones' suggestion, the mayor of Carthage issued an official proclamation asking for new members for the Post. A recruiting office for new members was established in the lobby of the Crane theatre, where legion members were in attendance daily. The theatre front, lobby and interior were appropriately decked in national colors, six and three and one sheet cutouts. An extra supply of accessories was used, including 24 sheets, inserts and heralds.

On the opening night of "Legionaires in Paris," sixty members of the Legion Post marched to the theatre with their colors under guard. They were halted at the entrance until just preceding the feature, and the organist played "Over There" and a medley of other well known war songs, during which the legion took their places in the seats assigned them.

Colors were placed on either side of the stage, a color guard stood at attention, the audience sang "The Star Spangled Banner," after which Manager Jones, on behalf of the Crane theatre, as one of the leading civic institutions of Carthage, welcomed the American Legion, another of the civic institutions of the community, as his guests. In a fifteen-minute talk, he sold both the legion and the theatre to the audience. This talk has since been used in both the rotary and high school assembles as a basis of general discussion on the constitution and other subjects.



The Movies as a Community Asset

We know a professional man who says he finds perfect rest and mental relaxation at the movie. When he is tired he goes to the picture show.

We know a family who plan to go to the movie together once a week. "Movie night" is an extremely enjoyable event to them.

We know many country people who find in the movie their only source of year-round recreation.

We know hundreds who have immeasurably broadened their vision of life by glimpses of distant lands and of important events in our own country.

We do not believe that boys are led astray by bandit pictures or that the movies in general are exerting an unwholesome influence on the youth of our community. We consider the moving picture house a real community asset, a source of pleasant recreation and amusement.

Here in Ottawa we have three movie houses. Their program standards are high. They bring to our city the best talent in the world, and we are able to enjoy it for a few cents. More power to our movies!

THE OTTAWA HERALD

THE OTTAWA HERALD SATURDAY, DECEMBER 31, 1927 (KANSAS)

The Ottawa-Herald, Ottawa, Kansas, recently completed a campaign stressing the value to the community of local institutions, including the motion picture theatres. Above is reproduced one of the displays devoted to the theatres of Ottawa.

Allentown Street Car Co. and Theatre in Tie-up

The Pergola motion picture theatre, Allentown, Pa., entered into an arrangement, effective February 20th, with the Lehigh Valley Transit Company, operating Allentown and suburban street car lines, whereby a purchaser of a weekly ticket of the railroad is entitled to free admittance to the theatre when showing the ticket at the box office, and when accompanied by one or more other persons who actually pays to enter the theatre. The railroad tickets will be honored at any evening or afternoon performance except on holidays and Saturdays.

Briefs

A STILL from Mary Pickford's "My Best Girl" was reproduced in the window of Boardman's, Stratford (England) store, with fully clothed wax figures representing some of the cast of the film. The scene represented a room in the home of "My Best Girl's" wealthy friends. Furniture, dress, tableware, carpets and hangings were featured in the display.

JOHN McMANUS, recently appointed manager of Loew's theatre, Dayton, Ohio, has endeared himself to the youth of that city. He recently arranged with one of the local dailies to have several reels of film made depicting the advantages of school life in the city's seats of learning, employing students from the various schools as the actors. The pictures, which are in two instalments, will be shown at Loew's. Officials of local schools co-operated in the movement, and the pictures are said to depict a highly interesting story, in addition to the views of school activities.

A SUNDAY midnight show, actually starting at 12:01 a.m., Monday, March 12, was put on at the Victoria theatre, one of the leading Wilmer & Vincent theatres in Harrisburg. Midnight shows are an innovation for the downtown section of Harrisburg, except that the Victoria tried one on Monday morning following last New Year's night, when the crowd was so great that it swept away the ticket sellers' booth in its eagerness to get inside. The show on March 12 featured George Bancroft in "The Showdown." Tickets were advertised for sale in advance and there was a large crowd in attendance.

THAT the public does not tire of contests was emphasized last week when Keith's Palace staged a "pretty leg" contest and had more than 2,000 girls and women registered as participating. It was in connection with the Fox picture, "Silk Legs." The theatre offered a prize for the legs most nearly like Madge Bellamy's. There were judges, of course. And newspaper stories and advertising. But it was a surprise to everybody to learn that so many people participate in a game of competition.

THROUGH a joint arrangement between Samuel Friedman, manager of the new Capitol theatre, Pottsville, and the "Pottsville Republican," a daily newspaper, all the persons residing in that city and vicinity whose birthdays are on February 29, and this occurs only once every four years, were invited to be guests at the regular show in the theatre on the afternoon of that date.

WHAT'S the matter with the clothes Gloria Swanson wears in "Sadie Thompson"? That's the question that Manager William Haynes, of the Allen theatre, asked the women of Cleveland last week. And to the one who sent in the best answer he presented an afternoon gown.

DURING the showing of "Ben Hur," at Hamilton, Ohio, recently, manager John Schwalm gave special reduced prices to the members of the local history classes.

Lane Chandler will be a supporting actor in "Gun Shy," a new Beery-Hatton comedy to be made by F. Richard Jones.

Key City Reports

New York City

THE Lenten season failed to cut into grosses of Broadway theatres to any marked extent last week, with the result that with one or two exceptions all houses registered very fair business.

At the Capitol William Haines' new picture, "The Smart Set" (M-G-M) gave this house good business for this time of the year, somewhat better than the previous week's trade, and the Paramount was well up to the mark with "The Showdown" (Par.). This house also did an advance over the week before. The Roxy was off again, making a worse showing with "If I Were Single" (W.B.) than it did with "Soft Living" (Fox) the week previous. Neither one of these pictures was strong enough to bring the big house up to its regular pace. Roxy's presentations are a big factor here and perhaps the fact that one was held over was to some extent responsible.

Fox is doing better over on the main stem, however, both "Four Sons" and "Mother Machree" registering a strong trade. The former, at the Gaiety, is apparently the better of the two, capacity business being reported, and, as predicted in last week's News, will, without doubt, stay in town for quite a time. New York's Irish will probably have a good, long cry with the latter.

The Strand thought enough of "Chicago" (Pathe) to hold it over for a third week and the returns justified the act. Also, the theory that this town's picture fans are getting wise to the fact that they can see a $2 show for much less if they wait a while is further strengthened by the amount of business done at popular prices.

The Rialto and Rivoli both turned in good business, the former with "The Last Command" doing well enough to hold for another week and the latter bringing to a close a most productive six weeks' run of Gloria Swanson's "Sadie Thompson" (U.A.). Although Miss Swanson's strength at the box office had previously slipped a bit on account of a couple of vehicles that just didn't seem to click with Broadway theatregoers, there doesn't seem to be any doubt that "Sadie" has again made her one of the best attractions along the Street.

"Wings" (Par.) at the Criterion remains as one of the strongest road shows seen along Broadway, the aviation picture being still able to fill this 800-seat house after an eight months' stand. The Astor is keeping "The Crowd" until "The Trail of '98" arrives, and is doing as well as anyone could expect with a show which was advanced from pop figures to the top on pictures. It seems that the public does not quite understand the error M-G-M made in not charging $2 at the start. At the Colony, "Finders Keepers" (U) helped things along a bit, but it takes something really out of the ordinary to keep this house filled. A tough baby, this one.

"The Jazz Singer" concluded a highly successful six months at Warner Bros.' theatre and the house is preparing for the premiere of "Tenderloin," with Dolores Costello and Vitaphone accompaniment. "Love" (M-G-M) still shows strength at the Embassy, but, according to reports, is nearing the end of its run to make way for another picture.

Not to be outdone by others, Ralph Ince made an underworld picture for FBO, and "Chicago After Midnight," along with a vaudeville bill featuring Waring's Pennsylvanians, did a fine business at the Hippodrome. The Cameo finished the run of "The Battles of Coronel and Falkland Islands" with a healthy financial statement. "Sunrise" (Fox) continues at the Times Square; "The Cohens and the Kellys" went into the Broadway; the 55th Street Playhouse brought back M-G-M's "Greed," and the 5th Avenue played "Chang" and "The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari" in a double bill.

Los Angeles

IN spite of the rain, which at times almost approached the volume of that shown on the isalnd of Pago Pago, "Sadie Thompson" ended the first week in establishing a new high mark for the United Artists Theatre. The picture is popular both afternoons and evenings.

"Wings" is duplicating here the same sweeping success it has registered in other leading cities. Finishing its eighth week, it has already exceeded the time originally arranged for it at the Biltmore and other bookings had to be shifted or cancelled entirely.

If the people of Hollywood and Los Angeles do not know there is such a picture as "Four Sons" it won't be the fault of Carthay Circle theatre. The progressive management has chartered an airplane outlined in Neon gas advertising "Four Sons." The plane circles the city nightly and attracts attention by a weird siren and bright colors. Attendance at the theatre has been very satisfactory the past week.

Grauman's Chinese theatre presents three shows for the price of one—in the forecourt, on the stage and "The Circus" on the screen. One has to reserve seats at least a week in advance to avoid disappointment.

There are two popular pictures playing downtown—"The Patent Leather Kid" at the Criterion and "The Legion of the Condemned" at the Million Dollar. Both theatres report that business was very large the first week.

"The Big City" played to a fair weekly attendance at the Metropolitan, while "Flying Romeos" proved just about the average attraction at Loew's State. Eddie Peabody's presentation was entertaining.

Kansas City

ATTENDANCE at first run houses in Kansas City last week was just about on a par with the previous week—slightly below fair. Weather conditions, exploitation and newspaper space virtually were equivalent to those of last week.

At the Newman theatre, "Rose Marie" drew a trifle better than last week's attendance record, while Wallace Beery and Raymond Hatton in "Wife Savers" at Loew's Midland drew a fair attendance, but far from what was expeced of the picture, which critics praised. "The Cohens and the Kellys in Paris" at the Liberty attracted crowds slightly better than the average, but a return engagement of Al Jolson in "The Jazz Singer" fell far below normal at the Globe. At the Pantages, the "Sharp Shooters" played to an attendance below normal.

"Ladies' Night in a Turkish Bath" at the Mainstreet did better than average, while a second week of "Wings" at the Shubert proved unprofitable.

Minneapolis

LAST week was just average for the picture houses in Minneapolis, with most of the theatres reporting "good but not extraordinary business" and letting it go at that.

"Sorrell and Son" held up unusually well during its second week at the Strand, and this film could almost have stayed over for still another week, but it was decided not to attempt it. It did, however, show unusually finer results during its fortnight engagement. Douglas Fairbanks, in "The Gaucho," proved a very nice attraction at the Garrick, and the attendance was such as to warrant holding it over for a second week. Richard Barthelmess in "The Noose," did not prove to be the box office card that many thought it would be, for Minneapolis' premier picture house reported "just good business" for the week. The stage play had been shown just a few weeks previous at the Shubert, and this may have hurt business some at the State. "The Warning," with Jack Holt, drew about the average crowds to the Lyric, but "Seventh Heaven" returned to the loop and did an excellent second run businss at the Grand.

Pantages exploited "Sharp Shooters" generously and found that it added considerable strength to the program, while Vera Reynolds in "Almost Human," seemed to satisfy the Hennepin-Orpheum customers. Hoot Gibson fans turned out, of course, to see "The Rawhide Kid" at the Seventh Street theatre.

Neighborhood houses, like the loop theatres, found business not much above nor much below normal. The Lagoon showed "The Circus," with Charlie Chaplin, for two days and cleaned up on that picture, while the Lyndale, Loring and Rialto were getting normal crowds with such films as "Sadie Thompson," "The Gay Defender," and "West Point."

Cleveland

THE week just passed was a profitable one for the theatre owners, although it offered little that was new to the public. "The Jazz Singer" played its fifth and last week at the Stillman, holding up strong until the very last performance. "The Circus," in the fourth week at the Cameo, continued to fill up the theatre and pile up the sheckels. And "The Divine Woman," with Greta Garbo, was shown with success for all concerned at the Park, where it played its first-run neighborhood engagement. "Sadie Thompson" was the outstanding new picture shown downtown. Praise for the picture and for Gloria Swanson's acting was unanimous. It was agreed to be the best she has done, and a fine production throughout, with tremendous entertainment value. "Sporting Goods," the liveliest picture Richard Dix has had in several seasons, went over big at the State. "Silk Legs," rather weak on plot, made up for its weakness in beauty display, which, according to the crowds at Keith's Palace, is just what the public wants to see. "Sailors' Wives" just about registered at Keith's East 105th Street and no more. What interest there was created in the picture was due to the directing and to the acting of the stars. Business was just fair. Reade's Hippodrome had a good old fashioned week with Tom Mix riding his hardest, saving his heroine, and doing his stunts better than ever.

Neighborhood house business was not very good. Neighborhood houses are suffering from Lent, combined with a chronic state of empty pockets. Legitimate competition was not particularly keen.

Cincinnati

BUSINESS in the more important downtown houses continues to stay around normal, and in the final analysis the past week as a whole averaged up very satisfactorily to the Libson interests, who control practically all of the houses in the business section of the city.

The Lyric, playing a two weeks' engagement of "The Crowd," had exactly what the title indicated, the entire engagement establishing quite an attendance record.

"The Circus," held over the second week at Keith's, attracted the Chaplin fans, who continued to come throughout the entire fourteen days. After being dark for two or three weeks following conversion of the house from vaudeville and pictures to straight pictures, the Chaplin film was used as an opener under the new policy.

The Capitol did a nice business with "Two Flaming Youths" and Vitaphone.

"The Garden of Allah," booked in at the Walnut, got a pretty good break on the week, although the nature of the story undoubtedly kept many away, especially at this particular season.

Richard Dix, in "Sporting Goods," at the Albee, maintained the average attendance at this house, which also shows stage acts.

The Strand did well with the "Fair Co-Ed," as did also the Family with "Truxton King" first half and "Fashion Madness" last half.

Gifts, in its first week of daily change, did a good business part of the week, while on some of the days the attendance fell off somewhat, although the week, taken as a whole, was satisfactory.

Milwaukee

BUSINESS was far from good in the down town theatres this past week.

At only one house could business be said to be good, and here it was very good. That house is the Alhambra, where Charlie Chaplin in "The Circus" was featured. Business was very lively throughout the entire week and the picture is being held over for a second week. At other theatres things were very slow. "The Latest from Paris," at the Wisconsin, drew fair patronage. "The Crowd," playing at the Merrill, was unusually well exploited, but failed to connect with big business. The Wisconsin News co-operated with the management in taking pictures of crowds at various down town corners, offering tickets to those who identified their pictures, thus giving the picture wide publicity. "Wild Geese," at the Garden, started out well, but it, too, lagged as the week drew on.

"Old Ironsides" was not accorded the patronage it merited at the Strand.

Theatres in the outlying sections of the city had a very good week. Business was uniformly good. "Love and Learn" at the Oriental was well attended. "Rose of the Golden West," at the Garfield, Uptown Tower and Modjeska theatres, succeeded in bringing in good houses. Patrons of the Venetian supported "Camille" to a gratifying extent.

Ottawa

THE theatres of Ottawa and Hull offered plenty of excellent film attractions during the week of March 5 and the general public responded nobly, every manager reporting splendid business. There was considerable opposition, too, because the Russell theatre had its best engagement of the season in "The Vagabond King," the musical show, while the "Minto Follies," a winter ice carnival, also attracted thousands.

The most noteworthy film feature was "The Student Prince," at the Regent, which pleased packed houses every afternoon and night despite its pathos. In fact, Manager Ray Tubman was warned to keep his aisles free of standees. "The Student Prince" might have played a second week.

"Gentlemen Prefer Blondes," at the Centre theatre, was also a great hit and capacity crowds were the rule. B. F. Keith's theatre was also a busy amusement centre with "The Opening Night" as the film attraction and everybody around town boosted this picture.

The Imperial theatre had one of its best weeks with "West Point." The crowds were so delighted with this picture that they overlooked its American flavor. The Imperial had a larger opening night crowd with "West Point" than for the first night of the repeat engagement of "Ben Hur" the week previous.

Crowds jammed the sidewalk in front of the Fern theatre for "California," starring Tim McCoy, and Manager Fred Benson could not have squeezed another thin lady into the house. The juveniles flocked to the Rex theatre, an attractive neighborhood house, to see Buck Jones in "The War Horse." The Columbia theatre box office was the receptacle for much cash from eager patrons for "The Land Beyond the Law," with Ken Maynard.

The Laurier theatre, Hull, had a strong pair of features in "Alias the Lone Wolf" and "A Hero for a Night." The former, starring Bert Lytell, proved to be exceptionally enthusing even after its recent presentation at the Imperial in Ottawa. The double bill at the Eden, "Silk Legs" and "One Glorious Night," attracted a houseful at evening performances.

Pittsburgh

WITH the Stanley Theatre playing Gilda Gray in person and on the screen in "The Devil Dancer" and the Penn having Charlie Chaplin in "The Circus," with Pat Rooney heading a strong stage show, competition was mighty keen, but both houses did holdout business and ran neck in neck all week with the Penn getting the edge the end of the week due to two reasons, first the kid trade helped, adult prices being charged, and the Gilda Gray picture was rather weak and mouth to mouth talk hurt some at the end of the week. It was curious at that to see long lines waiting outside each theatre, at the same time, as both houses are a block apart. Business was brisk at most of the other houses downtown also, although it was simply brutal in the neighborhood. At the Aldine, "Dress Parade" held up better than average and a strong Keith bill at the Davis, coupled with "A Texas Steer," kept the box office busy counting change. The Grand, with Dix in "The Gay Defender," fell off, but this was to be expected. The Cameo, playing the fifth week of "Cohens and Kellys in Paris," did as well as first weeks of many other pictures. This picture, in its five weeks, has grossed more than any other to play at the Cameo in 2 and a half years. Al Jolson, in "The Jazz Singer," fourth and last week, also did as well as many first weeks of other pictures. A Harold Lloyd revival, "Grandma's Boy," at the State, fared meagerly.

The legitimate houses suffered, all three theatres reporting poor business.

Atlanta

ATLANTA theatre box offices last week swelled and held their own throughout the week.

The Howard, with Gloria Swanson in "Sadie Thompson," rose to a high pinnacle and critics were generous in their commendations of the picture.

Ushered in with signal ballyhoo, "Rose Marie," with Joan Crawford and Ralph Forbes, enjoyed a good week at Loew's Grand.

Keith's Georgia boasted the SRO sign nearly every evening playing Billie Dove in "The Love Mart." A good vaudeville bill proved a material aid.

The Capitol did not lag behind with "13 Washington Square" and an attractive vaud program.

"The Jazz Singer," showing its third week at the Metropolitan, continued its success and will have a fourth week's run, thereby breaking all run records for a moving picture.

The Rialto had an unusually good week showing "The Leopard Lady," with Jacqueline Logan and Alan Hale.

At the Tudor, "Cleanup Man," "Top Sergeant Mulligan," and "Law of the Range" brought usual returns.

The New Alamo, showing only one first run, "Good as Gold," drew a good Saturday's business.

Dallas

BUSINESS at the Dallas theatres the past week has been exceptionally good at some of the theatres, while others dropped off considerably.

The Melba showed "Chicago" for a four-day run and receipts were fair. Due to the short booking, very little publicity was expended, and business was all that could be expected under these conditions.

The "Patent Leather Kid" opened Wednesday at the Melba, and business was exceptionally good from the start and increased throughout the week. This picture is booked for a ten-day run, and will top "Gaucho." The "pannings" given the film by local critics failed to affect business.

"Come to My House," with Olive Borden and Antonio Moreno, at the Majestic, failed to hold up the good business the Majestic has enjoyed for a number of weeks. At the Capitol, "Quality Street," with Marion Davies and Conrad Nagel, also failed to attract, and receipts were far below the Capitol average. However, this is only the second bad week the Capitol has had since the first of the year. "Old San Francisco," at the Old Mill, played to average houses, although receipts fell below those of last week.

Clara Bow, in "Red Hair," packed them every night at the Palace, and had the walk lined for the bargain matinee. Sanger Bros., one of the large department stores of Dallas, offered a style show in lieu of the Publix presentation. However, credit fo rexceptionally heavy business goes to Clara Bow.

"Her Wild Oat," "The Last Waltz," and "College," together with a Vitaphone presentation each night, brought the Arcadia a good week. The performance of the Arcadia proves that Dallas will support an A-1 suburban house.

Boston

WITH a mid-week snowstorm, the heaviest of the year and only the second real snowfall of this usually snowed-under section this time of year, Boston theatres continue to roll up box office receipts to the satisfaction of managers and exchanges. This year's business has been far ahead of anything in Boston's history.

While business looked rather spotty during the early part of the week, the end of the week finished strong. Friday and Saturday business was of the capacity variety, which has marked every week end for months.

Paramount's "Wings," which has held the road show stage for the past twelve weeks, finished its run with the second best week of the entire dozen, being exceeded only during the second week of the showing here. During the entire run no passes were issued for the show except for the initial review, yet there wasn't a vacant seat at any evening showing and but very few any of the afternoons.

"Red Hair" was the feature at the Metropolitan and the use of the technicolor to demonstrate the hue of Clara Bow's locks was an innovation which proved an enjoyable break to the customary black and white. Gene Rodemich was back in charge of the stage band and received a cordial welcome after his swing around the circuit.

Ruth Elder's personal appearance at Loew's State was the signal for capacity business at that house all week. "The Dove" was the film and can be credited with helping to pull record business for the week.

The Modern and Beacon theatres, the twin houses, playing their third week of "The Jazz Singer," are playing to such large audiences that the run of the film, scheduled to finish this week, will be continued for at least another week. This is the first time in the history of either theatre that a film has been shown simultaneously in both houses for more than two weeks in succession and is the first time that any film has ever run four weeks in succession in two theatres simultaneously in Boston.

"Doomsday," the offering at the Keith-Albee Boston theatre, is drawing unusually large audiences for the season

"The Last Command" is playing simultaneously at the Scollay Square Olympia and the Capitol to good business. "Man, Woman and Sin" is Loew's Orpheum feature, playing to a full week's good business

Other films which have proven popular during the week are "Loves of Carmen" at the Bowdoin Square, "Two Flaming Youths" at the Fenway, "The Noose" at the Washington Street Olympia, "Sunnyside," a Charlie Chaplin reissue, at the Howard, "Buttons" at the Exeter, "A Texas Steer" at the University, and "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes" at the Lancaster.

San Francisco

DOWNTOWN business in the first run picture theatres was satisfactory last week and the same report was given by the residential picture theatres. Competition was fairly keen and the weather, with the exception of night, was very mild,

The Embassy theatre, with the Vitaphone, again did the outstanding business of the week with Al Jolson in "The Jazz Singer," which was shown for a third time and is being held over for another week, as the crowds still are packing that theatre both day and night.

Douglas Fairbanks in "The Gaucho," attracted many to the St. Francis theatre, the fourth and last week, and that theatre did very well each week with this picture. "Flying Romeos," together with the presentation acts, crowded the Loew's Warfield theatre.

"Chicago," together with the acts Moss & Frye, Huges & Smoot and Owen Sweeten on the stage at the Granada theatre, well filled that theatre, the picture, however, not taking as well as the acts. "The Legion of the Condemned" attracted the World War Veterans to the California theatre.

The Union Square theatre reported good business with the showing of "The College Hero" and "South Sea Love,' together with stage acts. The same was reported by the Golden Gate theatre, which showed the Harding Davis novel picture, "Let 'Er Go, Gallegher," together with stage acts.

St. Louis

THE Three Horsewomen—Lent, Flu and Industrial Depression (or unemployment, as some campaign orators are pleased to style it)—are playing havoc with the receipts of the box offices of first runs and neighborhood and suburban houses of St. Louis and vicinity. It takes a real knockout show or feature picture to get across in big style in the face of the combination.

Vitaphone's "Old San Francisco" was the new attraction at the Grand Central theatre, Grand boulevard at Lucas avenue, succeeding "The Jazz Singer," which had closed a sensational run. It was aided by several short Vitaphone specialties. On the whole, it was a good week.

Loew's State, on Washington avenue at Eighth street, had on its screen "The Divine Woman," in which Greta Garbo was featured. It was an average picture and an average week.

"The Legion of the Condemned" was the feature picture at Skouras Brothers Ambassador theatre and, aided by Ed Lowry's stage show, "Havana," got its share of the business of the week.

The Missouri theatre, at Grand boulevard and Lucas avenue, showed "That's My Daddy." Janet La Verne, child star, and Reginald Denny had the leading roles.

"Stand and Deliver," a good action picture with unusual settings, was on the screen of the St. Louis theatre, Grand and Delmar boulevard. This house, which plays Orpheum Circuit vaudeville, always gets its fair proportion of the available business.

Indianapolis

INDIANAPOLIS picture houses reported a slight drop in box office receipts this week as a result of the opening of the Palace, new Loew's house, which has been remodeled. Weather was good.

Loew's attractions are expected to make a noticeable cut in Indiana's receipts because the Loew's price is somewhat lower than the Publix admissions. Charlie Davis' orchestra and stage band, favorite locally, is expected to hold majority of Indiana patrons. "Sporting Goods" was last week's attraction.

The Circle, with "Chicago" as the attraction, practically held its own in box office receipts. "Ben Hur" continued to sell at the Ohio, its fourth run in the city.

BUSINESS continued better last week at the first-run houses, probably due to the big publicity campaign being made on the new Publix opening. The Broadway registered very strongly with the opening week of Hermie King as band leader and master of ceremonies, together with Norma Shearer in "The Latest from Paris." Looks as the Hermie will mean extra sheckels for the Broadway box office.

Tebbett's Oriental was a very popular spot, with James Cruze's "On to Reno," starring Marie Prevost. House clicked to a good gate, and as a result showed a profit on the week.

Universal's Columbia was just fair with Charlie Chaplin in "The Circus," while Pantages was the town's big money-getter. Pantages held over the famous Duncan Sisters for another week, and they managed to bring home the bacon. The first week's appearance of the sisters brought the house record-breaking business. Fox's "Soft Living" was the picture, which rounded out a very satisfactory program.

Baltimore

LON CHANEY, in "The Big City," proved a bigger patron puller at Loew's Century with the Boris Petroff revue, Tick Tock, with Ted Claire as master of ceremonies and other favorites, including the Albertina Rasch girls, than did Charlie Chaplin in "The Circus" at Loew's Valencia upstairs in the same building during the week beginning Monday, March 5.

Business at the Century was big, while at the Valencia it was considered good but not startling. There is a diversity of opinions on Chaplin's latest effort here, many liking it and many thinking otherwise.

The reissued version of "Merry-Go-Round" was shown at the Little theatre by the Motion Picture Guild, Inc., but attendance was poor. The blame was put mostly on the film, which was considered not strong enough as a reissued attraction. "The Coward," featuring Warner Baxter and Sharon Lynn, played to good business at the New Garden with eight acts of Keith-Albee vaudeville on the same bill. "Stand and Deliver," co-starring Rod La Rocque and Lupe Valez, went over only fairly well at Whitehurst's New theatre. Fair business, but nothing extra, was done by "Law of the Range," with Tim McCoy and Joan Crawford, and burlesque on the bill at the Palace.

Poor business was done throughout the week at the Rivoli with "The Tragedy of Youth," co-featuring Warner Baxter and Patsy Ruth Miller with a banjo act. Part of the bad business at the Rivoli might be attributed to the fact that they were again out of one Baltimore newspaper for that week.

"That Certain Thing," co-featuring Viola Dana and Ralph Graves, proved an entertaining picture at Keith's Hippodrome and did good business, with excellent patronage on Saturday night. Five acts of Keith-Albee family time vaudeville were on the same bill.

During the first part of the week at the Stanley, "Sporting Goods," starring Richard Dix, did not pull so well, but during the latter three days business picked up considerably, making the week a good one. On the same bill a stage presentation act, In the Army, with Leon Navarra, his orchestra and other vaudevillians and Serova girls.

At the Metropolitan, "The Jazz Singer" played its ninth and final week for Baltimore at that house, with Al Jolson and May McAvoy in the featured roles and Vitaphone accompaniment and acts. Business was good throughout the week, and it could be seen that the patronage was coming from all parts of Baltimore, and not only in the locality of the house, which is uptown.

Seattle

THERE were three outstanding attractions in this city last week, each of which played to very good business. Topping the list, probably, as far as gross per seat is concerned, was "The Circus" at the Columbia theatre. Day and night the Chaplin film attracted very large houses, and Manager Bob Bender surrounded the film with a program of exceptional merit. The business was close to capacity at all times, and the film goes into a second week with standing lines still in vogue. Business very big.

Second came "The Last Command" at the United Artists theatre. This Jannings picture has the word-of-mouth advertising of everyone that has seen it, and it played to very good houses all week, building up toward the end of the run and occasioning a second week's engagement. Business very pleasing.

The third of the big films was "The Noose" at the Fifth Avenue Theatre. This picture was decidedly "heavy" and dramatic, but was well liked by most audiences, who were enthusiastic about Barthelmess' work. "Crinoline Days" was the Fanchon-Marco stage show, headed by Jan Rubini, eminent violinist. The show was very well received, and Hermie King, after twenty weeks as master of ceremonies, was given a big ovation on his farewell week. He goes to West Coast's Broadway theatre in Portland. Altogether, business was very good.

"The Opening Night" at the Blue Mouse theatre was just an average program attraction, but seemed to do the business for this house. Again Vitaphone and Movietone came to the rescue, but the combination of all the features on the program put this house over to a good gross for the run.

"Tongues of Scandal" at the Embassy theatre and "The Haunted Ship" at the Liberty theatre were both successful box office films at these two Joe Danz theatres. A stage show and jazz orchestra, used jointly by the two houses, had added appeal to the patronage of these houses, and the gross for the week at each theatre was quite satisfactory.

The vaudeville houses played average program attractions, with "Pajamas" at the Pantages getting the break as far as audience criticism is concerned. The Orpheum bill was "A Blonde for a Night," and this was decidedly below the calibre enjoyed by Orpheum patrons. Pantages business was good; Orpheum business fair. The latter house will soon announce a new continuous run policy at reduced prices, abolishing the reserved seat plan, due to the inroads of picture house business and the featuring of big names by the opposition vaudeville.

Interest is at a high pitch in this city as a result of the opening next week of the magnificent new $1,500,000 Seattle theatre, a 3,500-seat house to be operated jointly by West Coast, Publix and Loew. Featured will be the Publix stage presentations direct from the Chicago theatre in Chicago.

Albany

"THE PATENT LEATHER KID," running the entire week at the Mark Strand in Albany, played to capacity business each night, with matinees running heavy, from Monday until Saturday. Many in Albany had either seen or heard of the picture's success in New York city and this word of mouth advertising, together with liberal newspaper displays, was sufficient to bring the people by the thousands.

At the Leland, "Ladies Must Dress" also ran to capacity business, although the matinees might have shown some improvement. The Mark Ritz in Albany reported business as being only fair with Monte Blue's "Across the Atlantic." At the Clinton Square in Albany, where first run double features prevail, "A Sailor's Sweetheart" and "The Wizard" drew only fair. Weather conditions were ideal up until Friday night, when the worst snowstorm of the winter hit Albany and vicinity and cost the theatres plenty of jack through lost business.

At the Harmanus-Bleecker Hall in Albany, the combination of vaudeville and pictures continued to go over well.

Reports from neighborhood houses indicate spotty business over the city. It should be borne in mind, however, that the picture houses of Albany are finding plenty of competition these days from the Capitol theatre, where such road shows as "Abie's Irish Rose," "Blossom Time" and Ziegfeld's "Follies" are being offered.

The best bet of the week in Troy was "The Student Prince," which served to draw exceptionally well at the Lincoln. Poor business characterized "Beau Sabreur" for the first four days at the Troy, which did not seem to catch on, while "Gateway to the Moon" did no better. The Lincoln is splitting next week and using "The Enemy" for the first half and "The Missing Link" for the remainder of the week.

Tampa

THE Victory and the Franklin divided the honors on business last Sunday, the opening of the week, with both houses playing to capacity all day. The Victory featured "The Girl from Chicago" and other Vitaphone presentations, including Weber and Fields. The week went over fine, with receipts a little better than last week.

The Franklin had "The Gaucho," playing it a full week at 50c. The business for the first half of the week was excellent, but it did not hold up so strong the latter part.

The Tampa got off to a bad start on Sunday with "The Cohens and Kellys in Paris," but the following three days registered a little better and so the first half went over about average. "Old Ironsides," featured the last half, went over big and put the house over to a pretty good week.

The Strand didn't seem to have pictures this week with appeal and so could not overcome the big draws at the other houses. Receipts for the week dropped below the general average of this house. "The Tired Business Man" and "So This Is Love" were each used two days and "The Blue Danube" was used three days.

It's as good as a trip through Chinatown- and a lot funnier

Dressed to Kill

First Rate Melodrama Here

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

A CROOK melodrama bobs up here to bid for patronage and surely deserves anyone's time. What it has for highlights can be chalked up as excitement, suspense, characterization, vigor and action that moves with quickness and despatch. That Roxy chose it to mark the first anniversary of his big Broadway house shows that S. L. has his head up, looking for the good ones.

Its a story that carries a deal of conviction. What it offers seems to unfold as the genuine thing—something that could logically happen and is happening in this modern gang war era. The hi-jackers take a holiday here. The story concerns gangster activities with a Jimmy Valentine type (all togged up like a Finchley ad) as the central figure. This is meat for Edmund Lowe, who can sport the togs with the swank of a Wales. The actor rings up a very good characterization of the bank-robber, who is framed by his gang. When he is bumped off for being chivalrous you feel that the story is there. The maudlin note which so often clears up crook melodrama takes the count here. Which is why the film is out of the ordinary. Its clicking every minute and offers excitement in large measure. Book it and advertise it. And play up Mary Astor along with Lowe. It will surprise you.

Drawing Power: If well advertised should do good business. Feature Edmund Lowe as having real role for once and bill Mary Astor in her biggest and best played part. Good enough for any house. Exploit title.

THEME: Crook melodrama of gentleman robber who pays supreme penalty for kindness toward girl.

Produced and distributed by Fox Films. Length, six reels. Released, March, 1928. Cast: Edmund Lowe, Mary Astor, Ben Bard, Rob't. Perry, Joe Brown, Tom Dugan, John Kelly, Charles Morton, Robt. E. O'Connor. Director, Irving Cummings.

Finders Keepers

Lively and Entertaining

(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

LAURA LA PLANTE has a lively and entertaining vehicle in this Universal feature adapted from the story by Mary Roberts Rinehart, which fairly abounds in bright comedy situations, romance and the joy of youth. It is an army picture but not a war picture and it holds the interest from start to finish.

Miss La Plante is the army's sweetheart, much sought by officers and men alike, but she falls hard for a buck private, Carter Brooks, which role is played by John Harron. It is a case of love at first sight with Carter too and the pair start scheming as to how they are going to stay close to each other under the army regulations.

Barbara's father is the Colonel of the regiment and decidedly opposed to even an engagement for his daughter, despite which fact the young pair decide to get married before the departure of his company for Europe. Percy, the timid pal of Carter is persuaded to change clothes with Barbara that she may enter the cantonment and be near her sweetheart. There many humorous incidents follow until her exposure comes and it becomes necessary for her to outwit her father to gain his consent to her marriage. This brings a happy ending to a happy picture that will leave a pleasant taste in the mouths of nearly any andience. In its farcical action it is one of those pictures that should appeal to young and old alike.

Drawing Power: It is good, snappy farce comedy and should do well in almost any house. Exploitation Angles: The title lends itself readily to treasure hunts and the press book suggests a number of other good angles.

THEME: Comedy in which the daughter of the Colonel of the regiment falls in love with a buck private. Her father opposes her engagement, so she dons the uniform to be near her sweetheart, eventually outwits her father and is married before the company sails for Europe.

Produced and distributed by Universal. Released February 5th, 1928. Length, 6,081 feet. The Cast: Laura La Plante, John Harron, Edmund Breese, Arthur Rankin, Bill Gorman, Eddie Phillips, Joe Mack. Director, Wesley Ruggles. Author, Mary Roberts Rinehart. Adaptation, Beatrice Van.

Mother Machree

Mother Love Story Shapes Up Pretty Well

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

PRODUCERS can't go far wrong on mother love stories because of the sentimental appeal and the pathos attached. Fox hasn't another "Over the Hill" here, but the picture is good enough to attract patronage. The title should exert some interest among descendants of Erin—and the very fine acting of Belle Bennett in the title role is sufficient to earn her an excellent mark—along with the other good mark checked up opposite her name in "Stella Dallas."

It's a simple story enough in its theme, though it unfolds quite a bit of complications before it reaches its conclusion. It calls for a deal of suffering, a deal of self-sacrifice—and not a little local color and romance. The director, John Ford, has employed the heart stuff to good advantage without spilling over into maudlin sentimentality.

The Irish spirit comes forward to bid for favor. And Victor McLaglen and several others carry it out very well. The action covers considerable ground and, after a slow start, picks up momentum and ends satisfactorily. It may not carry the big heart tug in its most crucial moments, but it will do its stuff. After all, it's an audience picture.

Drawing Power: The title, the appeal of the song, the cast. O. K. for any type of house. Exploitation Angles: Feature title and go after Irish-American audiences. Feature Belle Bennett and what she has done on the screen. Play up cast. Bill as fine mother love story.

THEME: Heart-interest drama of mother love with its attendant self-sacrifice, etc.

Produced and distributed by Fox Films. Length, eight reels. Released, March, 1928. The Cast: Belle Bennett, Philippe de Lacy, Neil Hamilton, Victor McLaglen, Ethel Clayton, Constance Howard, Ted McNamara. Director, John Ford.

No Place to Go

Light and Entertaining

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

ONE of those light romances of love and foolishness, it has a satisfying mixture of drama gently edged to the side by sprightly touches of humor. Telling the story of two young lovers who abandon a yacht in the stealth of the night to find romance and adventure on a desert isle, it is not heavily weighed down with seriousness. The romantic girl and the equally romantic boy are rudely shocked when they find their dream of life on a desert isle is not the beautiful experience they imagined. Nasty weather, loneliness and cannibals make their sojourn on the island miserable.

It is semi-serious all the way. They are rescued from the cannibals and brought back to civilization, where the girl's mother promptly weds her off to the boy. They are still at odds over the island incident. As they do not speak to each other though they live in the same house there are more occasions for comedy when their spirits clash and they indulge in sharp spats.

Mary Astor and Lloyd Hughes play the young lovers and then the newlyweds with an eye for humor. Hallam Cooley puts over some effective comedy. The film succeeds in being entertaining.

Drawing Power: Good. Should appeal to married folk and the younger crowd. Exploitation Angles: Use cocoanuts, palms and other things usually associated with desert isles. Play up the romantic couple and their awakening to reality. The various things they bring with them to the island—canned goods, phonograph and golf paraphernalia—offer tie-up possibilities.

THEME: Comedy drama of two young folk who leave a yacht to experience life on a desert isle. They find primitive life trying and foolish and escape the isle just as cannibals threaten. Married, they are still at odds, but the ice is eventually broken and all ends happily.

Produced and distributed by First National. Released, October, 1927. Length, 6,403 feet. The Cast: Mary Astor, Lloyd Hughes, Hallam Cooley, Myrtle Stedman, Virginia Lee Corbin, Jed Prouty and Russ Powell. Story by Richard Connell. Scenario by Adelaide Heilbron. Director, Mervyn LeRoy.

The Heart of a Follies Girl

But Billie Dove Is Good

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

IT seems quite impossible to find a story more than fair-to-middlin' for Billie Dove. The newest essay presents an inconsequential plot which airs its mild action for the moment and then evaporates into space. Any yarn of the chorine's affaire d'amour must point a bit of conflict between a philandering playboy and a chap who has both feet on the ground. Of course, the girl must yearn for costly "ice." And the rich gentleman pays and pays. When it develops that the younger and poorer swain cannot buy the ring without forging a check he pronto executes a forgery. After languishing in jail the girl realizes she loves him. And so it ends.

It's a piece that carries little or no action, but the trite and overworked story couldn't be improved much under any circumstances. However, it is neatly staged, well photographed and Billie Dove, knowing her Follies, decorates the film with charm and personality. Larry Kent as the hero looks regular and Lowell Sherman does the bounder in truly Shermanesque style. You've seen him, so exploitations aren't necessary.

Drawing Power: Title has some appeal. Star is popular. O. K. for average houses. Should attract them in neighborhood houses. Exploitation Angles: Play up title featuring star as a real Ziegfeld graduate. Bill as romance of theatre. Play up Larry Kent, who is developing a fan following.

THEME: Romantic drama of chorus girl who, after wavering in her affections, finds romance with youth who committed forgery to win her.

Produced and distributed by First National. Length, six reels. Released, March, 1928. Cast: Billie Dove, Lowell Sherman, Larry Kent, Mildred Harris, Clarissa Selwynne. Director, John Francis Dillon.

The Opening Night

Imitative But Dramatic

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

THEY were not forgetful of the appeal of a recent Emil Jannings vehicle when they produced this heart drama. Towards the end of its story it imitates closely the situations that followed in the wake of Jannings' supposed death in "The Way of All Flesh." There is practically a parallel in the plight of old Father Schiller and that of E. Alyn Warren in this production. His wife believes him dead but he does not project himself anew into her life, preferring to stay in the background, a pitiable old man, lonely and desolate.

Claire Windsor is the young wife and John Bowers the young man who loves her. They are not to the fore often, as the picture mainly follows the predicament of Warren. He sees them married in much the same circumstances that Schiller viewed his family through the window and Stella Dallas watched the marriage ceremony of her daughter. His situation makes an appeal for sympathy. Certainly they've tried hard enough to insure his role succeeding in emptying the tear ducts.

Drawing Power: Good for neighborhood and second run trade. Exploitation Angles: The picture has an effective storm scene in which a liner sinks. Present this catastrophe in the form of cut-outs or stirring posters. It is a drama of the theatre which fact can be used.

THEME: Heart drama of the plight of a theatrical producer who is believed by all to have drowned during a storm at sea. His identity unknown, he sees his wife married to her leading man, and, rather than mar her happiness, he remains in the background working in a garage.

Produced and distributed by Columbia Pictures. Released. November, 1927. Length, 5,524 feet. The Cast: Claire Windsor, John Bowers, E. Alyn Warren, Grace Goodall, Bobby Mack and William Welch. Story by Albert Payson Terhune. Scenario by E. H. Griffith, who also directed.

The Tigress

Holds the Interest

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

AN interesting story is told in this romantic melodrama in which Jack Holt and Dorothy Revier co-star. Gypsies out for vengeance against an English earl forms the plot motivation.

Its heroine is presented as a firebrand, whose gypsy blood is riled because she believes the Englishman is the murderer of her father. When she is about to kill Holt her hand is stayed because she loves him. A resentful gypsy girl against a suave and polished Englishman with the man winning out because of his forceful personality.

Director Seitz has lavished plenty of atmosphere in his scenes of the earl's castle in the forest in which the gypsies are encamped. Another of the gypsies is the real villain, who had slain the girl's father because he wanted her for himself. A mute boy communicates the real facts concerning the slaying and the gypsy has to flee for his life.

It's all more than mildly interesting. Holt and Miss Revier offer some contrast as the collected Englishman and the spirited gypsy girl. The picture has appeal.

Drawing Power: Okay for the neighborhood cinemas. Exploitation Angles: Remind the would-be-customers of the gypsy angle by a tambourine, a dagger, etc. Use a realistic picture of a tigress to attract attention.

THEME: Drama of a gypsy girl who is rescued by an English earl when she is found hurt in the forest. He nurses her back to health but her love turns to hate for him when she is told he is the murderer of her father. Having vowed to kill him she finds she cannot do so because of love.

Produced and distributed by Columbia Pictures. Released, October, 1927. Length, 5,357 feet. The Cast: Jack Holt, Dorothy Revier, Phillipe de Lacy, Frank Leigh, Howard Truesdall and Frank Nelson. Scenario by Harold Shumate. Director, George B. Seitz| Assistant director, Clifford Saum.

"Penny Postals"

(Educational—One Reel)

LITTLE communications typical of the short messages scribbled on the backs of postal cards have been composed by Beth Brown for this new excerpt of the Curiosities series produced by Walter Futter for Educational. The scenes deal with rural places and take you among the workers in a banana plantation, out on the high seas with the rum runners and government speedboats, under the shadow of an ancient castle—quite a bit of variety, don't you think?

The film has been nicely edited and titled and can be calculated to do its share towards aiding in the effectiveness of a program.—RAYMOND GANLY.

Turn Back the Hours

A Well-Turned Melodrama

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

CONTAINING a good story, well acted with swing and punch, the Gotham production shapes up as more than adequate entertainment—virile, strong entertainment, as a matter of fact. Myrna Loy, the heroine, is most attractive, with her bewitching eyes and exotic personality making mighty interesting the role of the proud girl on an island overrun with renegades and cutthroats seeking both her and the riches of her father's hacienda. The young lady is seen in many close-ups and has to do much more than "look pretty." The story is told concisely by the director.

The story is laid in Caribbean isle and tells of a disgraced naval officer who overcomes his cowardice, befriending the girl when the bandits threaten. The natural cowardice of the hero is aptly detailed by Walter Pidgeon, whose tall and gangling frame is seen in the torture chamber of the villains and in action shots where he wrestles and slugs with his enemies. Lots of "he-man" stuff.

Drawing Power: A good attraction. Exploitation Angles: Use of stills of Myrna Loy in lobby layout. Have a cutout of the face of a clock or some sort of arrangement whereby you can have the hands of a dummy clock turning backwards continuously. The hero is an ex-naval officer, so you can introduce the naval uniforms

THEME: Drama of love and fighting on a Caribbean isle. Nursed back to health by young girl, hero, a discharged naval officer, proves a coward when she needs help most. Her father, hounded by a band of crooks and her safety threatened, the hero awakens to her danger and courageously fights the bandits until aid comes from the U. S. Navy.

Produced by Lumas. Distributed by Gotham. Released, March 12th, 1928. Length. 6,600 feet. The Cast: Myrna Loy, Walter Pidgeon, Sam Hardy, George Stone, Sheldon Lewis, Josef Swickard, Ann Brody, Nanette Villon, Joyzelle Joyner. Scenario by Jack Jungmeyer. Story by Edward T. Rose. Director, Howard Bretherton.

Chicago After Midnight

Very Well Done, Mr. Ince

(Reviewed by E. G. Johnston)

TAKING the much battered about city of Chicago and its underworld for the theme Ralph Ince has succeeded in turning out a creditable piece of work. Praise can also be handed to this director for his portrayal of Big Bill Boyd, the leading role in this picture. Others in the cast are satisfactory. There is but one criticism which this writer offers. Along about the middle of this film the action noticeably slows down and it is possible that a little judicious cutting would help considerably.

This is not an attempt to glorify any characters of the underworld, the producer states, and true enough all the villains get theirs by the time the last foot is run off. However, it surely seemed that the one bit of real pathos occured when Big Bill passed out in the arms of his pal.

Father versus daughter and daughter versus father, both unaware of the relationship, is the heart of the story. After serving 15 years in the "pen" Big Bill goes to Chicago to "get" a cabaret proprietor responsible for his jail term. He does not know that a popular dancer of the resort is his daughter. The latter is engaged to marry the orchestra leader on whom is pinned the guilt, when Big Bill finally bumps his man off. It is the girl's efforts to track down the real slayer which brings about the play between father and daughter.

THEME: Big Bill Boyd, a factor in the underworld is "sent up" for fifteen years and at the expiration of the term sets out to "get" the man who squealed. He gets him but the future happiness of his daughter becomes involved when crime is wrongfully fastened upon her lover. The gunmen get theirs and daughter gets her man.

Produced and distributed by F B O. Released, March 4, 1928. Length, 6,249 feet. The Cast: .Ralph Ince, Jola Mendez, Helen Jerome Eddy, Frank Mills, James Mason, Ole M. Ness, Lorraine Rivero, Carl Axzelle, Bob Seiter and Christian Frank. Directed by Ralph Ince.

Skinner's Big Idea

Slow Moving and Dull

(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

THE office of McLaughlin and Perkins moves at such a slow pace that they decide to get some young blood into it and discard all the deadwood. They do not get the young blood, discard the deadwood, nor do they speed up the pace. Instead they rejuvenate the old-timers in the office, but they do nothing to hop up the action in the picture. Consequently it drags slow-footedly through a bit of inconsequential action to a somewhat dreary conclusion.

There is scarcely an incident in the picture that one could enthuse over, neither is there suspense nor comedy. It was produced from an original story by Henry Irving Dodge and it just seems lacking in material suitable for transition to the screen. At no time after their rejuvenation do the principal characters move faster than a snail's pace. There is no climax to which they work up, and practically the whole punch in the story is confined to the last few feet.

Bryant Washburn is Skinner, the creater of the big idea. He is made junior partner and his first assignment is to fire the three oldtimers in the office, who are his closest friends. The senior partners take their leave with those instructions. Skinner decides to retain and rejuvenate the three by taking his own departure for a vacation and leaving them on their own. To properly stimulate them he hires a chorus girl, who is in love with the son of one of the proprietors. Her job is to embarrass the old boys to a point where they will think they are as young as they used to be. The plan works, of course. We see them primping up in new clothes and showing a little more initiative. They become golf addicts and apparently neglect the office entirely. But on the golf course, it is revealed, they land the big order the bosses have fallen down on.

Drawing Power: It is hardly suitable screen material and does not figure to get far. Exploitation Angles: Aside from the players there is little that might be exploited.

THEME: Comedy drama in which a trio of old employees are rejuvenated by a new junior partner assisted by a chorus girl employed as a secretary, so that they corral the prize order for the concern.

Produced and distributed by F B O. Directed by Lynn Shores. Original story by Henry Irving Dodge. Continuity by Matt Taylor. Released, May 11th, 1928. Length, 5,967 feet. The Cast: Bryant Washburn, William Orland, James Bradbury, Sr., Robert Dudley, Ole M. Ness, Charles Wellesley, Martha Sleeper, Hugh Trevor, Ethel Grey Terry.

Saddle Mates

Average Western Film

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

THE old standbys in the western dramas —the villainy of the rustlers and the bravery and straight forwardness of the hero—spur this typical western film to its usual conclusion, wherein the villains get a lacing and the hero gets the girl. An average example of western entertainment.

Its main points: several fist fights between the hero and the villain; a rescue of the heroine on a runaway horse by the hero; plenty of plotting and villainy on the part of the villains and reprisals on the part of the hero; a fight on top of a moving freight train between the hero and a villain who had just shot the hero's friend. The latter scene is the grand finale.

Wally Wales is the young hero always fighting, Peggy Montgomery the girl he is after and J. Gordon Russell the villainous rogue.

Just average—that's all.

Drawing Power: Fair. Exploitation Angles: Use a cowboy's outfit, lassoes and saddle as a lobby display. Emphasize the action scenes.

THEME: Western drama in which a young westerner finally finds a villain he and his pal have been seeking for some time. The villain does everything in his power to kill them both, hiring gunmen for the job, but is unsuccessful. The villain is finally exposed and driven out of town while the hero wins his sister.

Produced by Action Pictures, Inc. Distributed by Pathe. Released, March 11th, 1928. Length, 4,520 feet. The Cast: Wally Wales, Peggy Montgomery, J. Gordon Russell, Hank Bell, Charles Whitaker, Lafe McKee, Edward Cecil, Lillian Allen. Story by Harrington Strong. Continuity by Frank I. Inghram. Director, Richard Thorpe.

The Secret Hour

NOT much could be done with this one, which stars Pola Negri. In the first place she is miscast in a role which calls for unsophistication. And the Polish star could never look as if she didn't know what it was all about. Originally this story was known on the stage as "They Knew What They Wanted." But it carried censorable qualities about it—in its triangle play. So the development was altered to make it fit the screen. The result is an orthodox, conventional yarn which hasn't the values of suspense or surprise.

Playing the part of an unloved waitress Pola falls in love with the photograph of what she supposes is an ardent swain. It seems that an elderly fruit grower sent his employee's picture to conquer her. Naturally the girl takes a liking to it—and really falls in love with the original of the photo when she sees him. And the old fellow is left out in the cold.

It is told without any conviction and fails to reveal any neat highlights. This isn't the type of story for Negri. So, of course, she couldn't do much with it. Once upon a time it made a corking play. The roles are satisfactorily filled by Jean Hersholt and Kenneth Thompson.

Drawing Power: Suitable for average houses. Exploitation Angles: Play up the star and her supporting cast. Bill as a story of lovesick people in search of romance, etc.

Produced and distributed by Paramount. Length, six reels. Released, March, 1928. The Cast: Pola Negri, Kenneth Thompson, Jean Hersholt, George Periolat. Director, Rowland V. Lee.

"Whoozit?"

(Educational—Two Reels)

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

AN exhibitor is lagging behind if he overlooks a number like this Charley Bowers example of how comedy can be made more effective with just the right amount of novelty and mystification. It's the best Bowers comedy we've seen, even better than "There It Is," and that is saying a pageful when you consider how good that Bowers comedy was.

Have you ever seen an oyster walk? Have you ever beheld a cockroach throw china We had never seen these things done before until we viewed "Whoozit?" and now we believe that anything is possible—in a Charley Bowers comedy. More amazing than Aladdin's lamp or the magic genii are these mysterious creations which Bowers introduces occasionally along the route of his comedy.

Bowers has also utilized the idea of a menace always pursuing, always threatening. This menace is somewhat similar to the "Fuzz Faced Phantom" in "There It Is." Bowers imagines he is being sought after by this menace. He imagines all sorts of things—the oysters walking, the roaches hurling saucers. These wild phantasmagoria are the result of gas which Bowers has deeply inhaled. While in his drugged state of mind rivals that of an opium eater's for the procession of events coursing through it of which he is the fantastic central figure.

Decidedly different and a first-rate, crackerjack novelty.

Supporting Bowers are Ted Lorch, Ray Turner, Ann Brodie, Emily Gerdes and Kewpie Morgan. Directed by H. L. Muller. Photographed by Jay Turner.

"Love's Springtime"

(Educational—Two Reels)

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

BEYOND a doubt there's class to this production done in Technicolor. Technical finish is written all over it—in the color, in the costuming, in the sets. Lovely Hope Hampton wears the beautiful gowns of the old France prior to the Revolution. She, caparisoned in exquisite silks of delicate sheens and subtle form, is a powerful attraction all by herself. Both men and women will enjoy her charming presence so strongly enhanced by the beautiful sartorial creations she wears.

The story of "Love's Springtime" is slight and skimpy. Briefly, it tells of a spirited French girl of noble blood who weds a marquis in whom apparently she has not the slightest interest. She is extremely jealous, however, of any other female eyes scanning him. When she learns he has a rendezvous with a charmer she contrives to take the latter's place. So it is that her reserve is broken down and her heart is revealed to her husband.

Not much story, but what is has been handsomely mounted. Made in France it is strictly atmospheric, such famed scenes as the palace of Versailles lending it authenticity. The nobility of the day went in for fine clothes, so you have the marquis painted as a fop and dandy. This chap, Jacques Catalaine, is quite effeminate, which fact is a deterrent to the picture to a certain extent. Leonce Perrett is credited with the direction. Titles by Harry Chandlee. Photography by Howard Green.

Is it pretty to watch? We'll say so. An exhibitor ought to run pictures of this type occasionally. They add prestige to his house, and are excellent novelties.

"That's That"

(Universal—Two Reels)

(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

BUSTER, Tige and Mary Jane play a lot of havoc in this comedy of the Buster Brown series, but for once their antics bring about some good results for themselves and more particularly for Buster's father. There is much of the usual variety of slapstick comedy that characterizes all of the pictures of this series. It's a somewhat disconnected story but stories don't seem to have much bearing where this incorrigible trio are concerned.

Buster's father is the inventor of a new bombing plane which he is about to demonstrate to an all-important committee. He starts for his destination with the trio secreted beneath the rumble seat. All goes well with the demonstration of this radio-controlled plane until Buster loads it up with TNT. Its antics then put the committee to rout and Brown senior is threatened with disaster, until, through a trick of fate and a great break for all hands concerned the life of the chairman of the committee is saved when the plane keeps him from being precipitated over a high cliff. He signs a contract on the spot for all the planes the Brown company can deliver. Buster, Mary and Tige are given full credit for their participation.

"The Kiss Doctor"

(Fox-Van Bibber—Two Reels)

(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

THESE Van Bibber comedies never lack for action and they are more elaborately staged than most of the two reelers. This one is no exception. It presents Tyler Brooke in the role of Reginald Van Bibber and Duane Thompson as the girl. They will undoubtedly get a number of laughs from most audiences, though Brooke's playing of the shrinking violet who is so frightened of females is too silly to be very humorous. He exaggerates the weakness out of all proportion.

The bashful Van Bibber just can't seem to keep away from girls, though he makes every effort to do so. As a young doctor he joins a male specialist, only to find after he has the job that it is a female specialist and a very busy office at that. There is a roomful of beauteous damsels waiting examination for all sorts of complaints and among them the fair Duane Thompson who has been in love with him since they were children. Van can't stand all the embarassment and throws up the job.

In an endeavor to escape the ladies Van decides to seek the rest cure at a sanitarium. He is admitted, though it is a sanitarium for women. Again he is completely surrounded by the fair ones and is called upon the render them professional service. As he becomes exhausted he has a dream in which he sees himself as a caveman, showering attentions and caresses upon the fair sex. He likes it and when he awakes rushes back to his old job. There he encounters Dorothy, embraces her in he-man style and declares he has wanted her all his life.

"A Son of the Frontier"

(Universal—Two Reels)

(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

NEWTON HOUSE is the bold, dashing young hero of this western featurette, whose story is so slim that it takes an extra allotment of wild riding to pad it out to the full two reels in length. The riding is by no means objectionable, but it would be more thrilling if there was a little more incident to the story.

Young House is given little credit in the community for his various accomplishments because of his tender age, but he leads them all a merry chase before its over. It seems there is a road agent molesting the community and therefore very much sought. The posse takes after the desperado but he eludes them, only to be cornered by the clever youngster.

When the youth rides down the bandit he is much distressed to find it is his own uncle, but everything is all right between them when uncle explains that he has been falsely accused. Meantime Dan Carson of the pony express, who loves Billy's sister, has been at the head of the posse tracking the bandit. Billy dons the attire of the road agent and attracts the fire of the posse to himself. He makes his getaway and takes the falsely accused uncle back to the fireside, where Dan is explaining to sister his own heroic actions of the day. There is no solution to the story offered and uncle apparently, for no reason at all, is not longer under suspicion.

"Lost in the Lurch"

(Bray—Two Reels)

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

THERE'S not much humor lurking in this short. The gags are very weak and so is their execution. Perry Murdock is the young man who tries to be funny, Nita Cavalier the girl in the opposite corner, Edna Hall and Charlie Accardo the others. Comedy is attempted in scenes showing Perry as butler, cook and general servant in his friend's home when guests are being entertained. If audiences will laugh at shots of a party trying to devour a whisp broom served as shredded wheat or will guffaw at views of a skunk brought out to the guests as a roast chicken—well, then, this comedy will have succeeded where, to this reviewer, it does not seem possible. For the most part its comedy is nil.

Craig Hutchinson directed.

"Cutting Up"

(Bray—Two Reels)

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

THE McDougall Alley Kids are featured in this new comedy produced by the Bray studios and directed by R. B. Wilcox. The comedy cannot be described as a humdinger or a whale of a laugh maker, but tame and just so-so. On the assumption that audiences will feel indulgent towards the efforts of a bunch of youngsters to cavort and frolic in their attempts to squeeze some humor from unresponsive situations, this reviewer believes that the comedy will prove about fair.

The kids are shown plying active hands at building a house. How they get confused and mixed in their purpose is the source of the comedy.

"Married Bachelors"

(Universal—Two Reels)

(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

THIS is a typical Charles Puffy comedy of the series by Octavus Roy Cohen. Like the others that have gone before, the story is probably fair enough in its original form, but it goes out of all proportion by the too strenuous efforts to inject much slapstick and knockabout comedy. As a matter of fact the story becomes almost completely lost with its enmeshing in silly gags and ridiculously created situations.

Puffy is the tired business man who frames with two friends to overcome the objections of his wife to a fishing excursion. One of the friends poses as a doctor and orders the trip. They take Puffy away in an ambulance, which they convert into a touring car when they are safely on their way.

The trio arrive at Hook Line Lodge, where the feminine attractions exceed the fishing prospects. They are doing nicely when Puffy's stenographer tips off the treachery of the trio to their wives, who immediately set out for the lodge. There is then the wildest bedlam at the lodge when the three men attempt to conceal their beauteous companions. The girls are dashed from room to room as the outraged wives take up the chase in ernest. It is typically wild farce and a trifle too prolonged to get the continued laughs hoped for.

"Special Edition"

(Universal—One Reel)

THE trials and tribulations of a small town newspaper publisher are revealed in this one of the Harold Highbrow series featuring Ben Hall and Lydia Titus Yeamans. The editor of the Clarion has just seen his extra come off the press exposing the graft of Boss Weaver, when it is discovered that Weaver has stolen the incriminating proof from the newspaper owner.

The distribution of the extra is ordered stopped, but the office monkey circulates enough copies so that one gets into the hands of Weaver and he is all set for a libel suit. The monkey, however, enters Weaver's office and unknown to the grafter steals the letter back. Weaver descends upon the Clarion owner with all sorts of threats as the monkey slips the incriminating document to Harold Highbrow, star reporter. Harold dramatically saves the day when he flashes the letter in the face of the grafter. This series seems to be improving lately. There are a few laughs in this one.—CHESTER J. SMITH.

"Barnyard Rivals"

(Bray—Two Reels)

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

WALT LANTZ, who not so long ago was one of the prominent figures in the animated cartoon world with his "Hot Dog" cartoons, is seen here in the grease paint as a farm hand—and quite a doltish one at that. He and Tiny Ward are the two comics who are crazy about their visitor from the city, the very decorative Peggy Shaw. As they are rivals in love they are constantly up to all sorts of tricks which every now and then show a tinge of humor.

Having shown incidents relative to the girl wanting to milk a cow—a make-believe cow made up of Lantz and Ward—and such type of humor, the comedy switches to the race tracks where the rivals contest an auto race, the winner to win the girl.

It's all nondescript as comedy. The impression is carried away that the piece was rushed through and any painstaking in the matter of presenting some lively fun was avoided. Stan de Lay directed.

"Sunlight"

(Burns-Vorhaus—Two Reels)

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

A LONELY path is trod by the producers of films like this "Sunlight." They set out to show you something not of the common character that stamps the majority of productions nowadays. They take a risk in going in for the artistic, the finer points of cinema, and, as their product is not toned down (or dumbed up) for the average movie fan, and as they avoid all the old reliable situations so dear to the heart of the producers, it cannot be said that it will go over with a bang with the masses. In this short subject they have done a worthwhile piece of work, but decidedly it is not box-office.

Produced by Bernard Vorhaus and Jessie Burns, "Sunlight" is brooding, tragic. It has two indelible characterizations of two sisters, roles played by Zasu Pitts and Ada Beecher. The older woman is a tyrant who rules her home with callous indifference to the others in it. The spirit of this woman permeates every nook and corner of the house; her dried-up heart lacks human sympathy; she is hard and her hardness beats down the feeble resistance of the younger sister. The latter is confined like a prisoner in this house. Her selfish sister, like the shades which bar the sunlight, has barred happiness from her soul.

So when the younger sister sees that she intends to crush the romance of a young girl and spoil her life, also, she urges the girl to run off with her lover. She herself, rather than return to that hateful house, wanders off along the long, winding road to the graveyard with no protection against the blinding sun. The thoughts that go teeming through her mind, of memories of long ago, of lost happiness are delicately visualized by the director. It is tragic, sombre, a moody thing. The director has woven this skein of sadness, not with an eye towards the box-office, but with his faculties centered on the task of shaping something innately fine.

Sure winner!

"Love is Blonde"

(Fox-Imperial—Two Reels)

(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

THIS Imperial Comedy, directed by Mark Sandrich and Zion Myers has in the cast David Rollens, as the boy, Dione Ellis as the girl, Larry Steers, Thelma Hill, Fred Spencer and the dog, Pal. It abounds in roughhouse comedy, most of which falls to the lot of David Rollens and Thelma Hill as the maid. Miss Hill is a right clever comedienne with a wide variety of gag and knockout stuff. Rollens, too, does his work well in this direction.

Rollens is in love with Dione, whose father has serious objections to him and would have his daughter marry the big game hunter who has just returned from his triumphs. The game hunter is due at the girl's home, so Rollens assumes that disguise and fools the fond father until in a mix-up the lad's false moustache becomes misplaced. He is promptly ejected, but, still persistent, he comes back a second time disguised. At the same time a husky plumber arrives who is taken for the real big game hunter. It then becomes the task of the boy and girl to keep the plumber out of sight of the father and considerable comedy develops as a result.

To prove his genuineness, the youth does some fancy shooting with bow and arrow and follows it up with a display of gunmanship that at least convinces the father that he is an expert with the pistol. By the time the real hunter arrives the father is so disgusted with the whole idea of big game hunters he hurls him into the lake and all ends well.

"Circus Days"

(Educational—Two Reels)

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

AN entertaining comedy, presenting the feminine funster, Dorothy Devore, this two-reeler has the circus tent as the scene of its frivolities. Dorothy is a wide-eyed country lass, who has been smitten by the good looks and appearance of the circus strong man. She is found moping around the circus dressed in boy's clothes, so they put her to work as the strong man's assistant. The result: much stupidity and comical antics from Dorothy.

Besides Miss Devore, there are the slight Babe London, Monty Collins, William Hauser, Phil Sherman, Hy Meyer and Jack Miller in the cast, which Charles Lamont directed. Besides the circus didoes there are others in the home of Dorothy which show her two sisters entertaining their boy friends, who, however, are more interested in Dorothy, which fact works on the sisters so that they lock her in her room after taking her clothes, leaving her to don masculine attire and run off to the circus, where she finally wins the man of her dreams.

"How to Please the Public"

(Educational—One Reel)

YES, that's a hard question to answer. "But what could be more convenient," evidently, said the producers of this Hodge-Podge, "than to show the public just how we go about our attempts to cull interesting scraps of news and humor for their entertainment?" That's what Editor Robert E. Gillam and Animator Archie N. Griffith have done here with about average results. It takes the spectator into the Lyman H. Howe Studio in Wilkes-Barre, into the various departments (some 23 of 'em) and explains "the works."

Okay as filler on your program.—RAYMOND GANLY.

"Her Only Husband"

(Universal—Two Reels)

(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

IF the same amount of thought were put into the building of even a skeletonized humorous story as is applied in conceiving so many slapstick and rough and tumble comedy gags and situations that are not funny, this series would be far more attractive. As a cartoon strip, from which it is adapted, it needs no story. It can be read in a minute or two, but in picture form, that's something else again. A little bit of story relief would be an improvement on seeing McGinis knocked around continuously for the full time that is consumed in the showing of two reels.

McGinis, over the serious and strenuous objections of his wife, finally makes his getaway from the family fireside in this one, but he does so sans trouses, which are hidden by the Mrs. He answers a call to a cabaret where he is to complete a business deal. Of course, he has forgotten he is without his trousers when he enters the cafe, to which come his wife and the Joneses.

McGinis, at the time, is in the custody of a fair entertainer. The headwaiter takes him or one of the hired help and assigns him as waiter at his wife's table. From then on Mrs. McGinis proceeds to make a wreck of the cafe, and she continues to do so until she has succeeded. Occasionally there is a humorous situation, but, for the most part, the strenuous efforts at comedy are not amusing.

"The Duke's Dirty Doings"

(Bray—Two Reels)

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

THE direful proceedings hinted at in the title of this Skylark comedy are concerned with the attempts of Perry Murdock to win the hand of Nita Cavalier. The "doings" are not productive of many laughs and in general the whole comedy wears a tired out aspect. Although Murdock tries hard with his buffoonery to inject some comedy he does not succeed in getting over any antics that could fully be described humorous. If we may call it so, it's a weary sort of comedy with a dearth of gags and sorely in need of a lively and energetic gag man.

Craig Hutchinson directed Murdock and Miss Cavalier, who are assisted by Edna Hall and Charlie Accardo. Their efforts to launch something funny go for naught. When you figure it out they had a sad story to work with.

"Spring Has Came"

(Educational—One Reel)

MONTY COLLINS, Educational's indefatigable worker on the Cameo lot, stars in this one whose theme is an old, old song—married life and its difficulties. Monty is the young husband so sure of his ability to "fix" things around the house, but really quite useless and like an Andy Gump in his unavailing efforts to straighten a carpet, hang a picture, etc. This funny-faced comic is never called on to do anything really funny, his gags being of the slapstick type, but he is a trifle more than adequate anyway in portrayal of a moth-eaten role. There are laughs in his comedy which will best go over in the neighborhood houses and the like.—RAYMOND GANLY.

"Felix the Cat in Ohm, Sweet Ohm"

(Educational—One Reel)

"OHM," that little word meaning a unit of electrical resistance so popular in the cross-word puzzles, provides the kick, spark and wallop of this new Sullivan cartoon, starring Felix. The sage little cat harnesses the forked electrical discharges from the clouds and hires them to do his bidding, drive a horseless hansom, substitute for an elevator, and do the house-cleaning usually relegated to the broom. It all ends disastrously for the cat when the forked lightning shows too much animation and spirit, and Felix is the recipient of several clouts and thumps.

Entertaining and containing quite a bit of that effervescence which the Felix cartoons always have.—RAYMOND GANLY.

Regional News from Correspondents

New York & New Jersey

REPORTS coming in from various neighborhoods in New York City and vicinity would indicate that business at the present time is anything but satisfactory, a number of reasons being advanced as contributing factors to the slump at the box offices.

Of course every Spring it is usual to extend a certain amount of sympathy in view of the coming daylight saving season and most exhibitors will also agree that Lent does not make any perceptible bulge in the bank account. It has also been said that many of the neighborhoods have been greatly overseated, a condition which has resulted in the closing of a number of the smaller houses. However, in addition to all this it is agreed by many exhibitors in this section that there exists beyond a doubt a slight business depression which has had the effect of tightening purse strings of the customers. It is not a particularly bad one—and one which will undoubtedly rectify itself when the present political situation becomes more clarified.

The box office situation is less alarming in theatres along Broadway and in those of the larger adjacent cities. These houses always get their share of the considerable transient trade and even with a weak picture get by with the de luxe type of show, which practically all are presenting. To some extent these theatres are also pulling trade away from neighborhoods. But the big houses have also felt the slump somewhat, as is evidenced by the very noticeable fluctuation of receipts. One week they do fairly well; the next, quite a bit below average.

After a four weeks' trip to Florida, where he visited the cities of Miami, St. Augustine and Palm Beach, Lawrence Bolongino, general manager of the Consolidated Amusements Enterprises in New York City, has returned much improved in health. Previous to leaving for the South, Mr. Bolongino was on the sick list. His partner (Mr. Funcke) is reported to be preparing for a six months' visit in European cities.

Sydney Cohen is expected to start construction on his new Strand theatre, 161st Street and Westchester Avenue, in the early Spring of this year. The old 600 seat Strand will be torn down and present plans are said to call for the erection of a 2,500 seat theatre on the same site.

Another well known theatre owner to start breaking ground for a new house is Sam Lesselbaum, who has a 2,500 seat project under way in Canarsie. During the past few years Canarsie has advanced from a small community to a population said to be at least 30,000. Morris Blinders is the owner of the one other theatre in this section, the Canarsie theatre.

Delay in installing certain equipment is said to be the cause for the postponement of the opening of the new Stanley theatre at Journal Square, Jersey City. A definite date appears hard to determine at the present writing but this theatre will positively open during the latter part of March. Of course, everyone knows by this time that the w. k. Nellie Revell has been named publicity director for this big 5,000 seater.

Walter Reade Enterprises have recently equipped the Strand and Empire theatres in New Bruswick, N. J., with new screens from National Theatre Supply. National has also re-equipped the booth of the Broadway, a Publix house in Poughkeepsie, and the Strand at Yonkers.

Joe Weinstock's Tremont theatre, a new 3,000 seat theatre has been officially taken over on lease by Loew, Inc., and will be opened Decoration Day with a program of pictures and vaudeville. Stores and offices also form part of the theatre building.

The Tremont section is becoming quite a theatre centre these days, which, of course, means a center of much competition. Within a few blocks of the Weinstock property is the Ellsmere, formerly owned by Mr. Weinstock, who is said to have recently repurchased a half interest; Keith's new Chester, said to be doing a remarkable trade, and the Boston Road theatre, the latter now a couple of years old.

Walter Greene, first vice president of National Supply Company, recently returned from a two weeks' trip through Eastern division territory. Joe Hornstein is holding the fort at 1540 Broadway.

Dave Solomon, well known salesman for National Supply, had a moustache a few weeks ago—now he hasn't got it. Why? Ask Dave.

Morris Seidlitz, formerly associated with Sydney Cohen's Tremont theatre, is now in charge of the Allerton theatre, Allerton and White Plains Avenue, the Bronx. It is reported that Mr. Seidlitz is doing a very nice business there and this would further belie a rumor a few weeks past that the Allerton would be placed on the market. These columns carried a report, without confirmation from the Allerton Theatre Corporation, that the Allerton had been sold, but this was subsequently denied by one of the executives.

The Webster theatre, Webster Avenue and 167th Street, is to be reopened by Coleman Bros.

Another house, closed for some time and about to be reopened, is the Royal theatre, located on So. Boulevard. Moe Goldman, also operating the Art theatre in the same locality, will take charge.

Morris Blinders, who has a lease on the new Tuxedo theatre, Jerome Avenue, is said to be considering a sublease of the house to another party.

The Lafayette theatre in Harlem has changed from a policy of vaudeville, etc., to pictures.

Millburn, N. J., is slated for Sunday pictures, according to report.

Another new theatre to be built by the Jersey City Theatre Co. in the Boulevard Plaza section of Hoboken, is the report.

Hicksville, L. I., will have a new theatre this Summer to be operated by Casey and Wheeler of the Playhouse Operating Co.

Morris Kutinsky has returned from a trip South.

Kansas City

IT was a merry war between the Pantages and Gayety theatres of Kansas City to obtain Josephine Haldeman Julius and her companionate husband, Aubrey Roselle, for a booking, the Pantages theatre, first run motion picture and vaudeville house, winning out. Roselle and his wife, who are students in the University of Kansas and who have received wide publicity in the Kansas City territory, were scheduled to begin their act at the Pantages March 9, the Pantages having been the highest bidder at $600 weekly, its is understood. Following the booking it was necessary to employ an extra telephone girl at the theatre to answer questions concerning the young couple's appearance, Charles Charninsky, Pantage's manager, said. The booking wil be for one week, a later booking to include the entire Pantages circuit.

Crowel's interests in the Navojo theatre, Hardtner, Kans., have been purchased by Walter Dial; the Hubbell theatre, Trenton, Mo., which was damaged by fire recently, has been reopened by Manager W. M. Hubbell; the Grand theatre, Beloit, Kans., will be closed one week for rdeecorating; the United Studios, Inc., of Chicago, have been awarded the contract for the decorating of the new Tackett theatre, Coffeyville, Kans., according to John B. Tackett, owner of the theatre; the LaCrosse theatre, LaCrosse, Kans., has been leased by A. F. Weber and C. C. Haas, of Great Bend, Kans.; the Lenora Opera House, Lenora, Kans., has been purchased by John Schieferecke, from Percival Bros., of Hoxie, Kans.; the Rex theatre, of Bronson, Kans., has been opened by Joseph Paffin, of Parker, Kans.

Among the out-of-town exhibitors in the Kansas City market this week were: Lawrence Brueninger, Orpheum, Topeka, Kas.; T. D. Block, Odessa, Mo.; C. M. Pattee, Pattee theatre, Lawrence, Kas.; Walter Wallace, Orpheum, Leavenworth, Kas.; Frank Weary, Farris theatre, Richmond, Mo.

He who has the reputation of being the smallest film salesman in the Kansas City territory—Max Meyer, weight 90 pounds—now is selling features for the Tiffany exchange.

Miss Bernice Nowlin and Miss Catherine Lawler have been added to the office force of the Warner Bros., branch.

C. C. Ezelle, southern and western sales manager for Warner Bros., was a Kansas City visitor, incidentally arriving in time to look over the new Hupmobile sedan bought the other day by M. C. Sinift, Warner Branch manager.

Roy Churchill, F B O branch manager, and Beverly Miller, National Screen Service representative in Kansas City, returned from Chicago, where the former had attended a sales meeting of his company.

Carl G. Howe has succeeded Wesley Dunlap as booker at the Educational branch.

Denver

JACK KRUM, long associated with United Artists as branch manager in Denver, is now a special representative for the local branch office of Fox for the Denver territory.

A fire causing damages to the extent of $2,500.00 occurred in the Black Hills theatre of Hot Springs, S. D. last Wednesday morning. The cause of the fire is unknown. Considerable damage was done to the seats and drapery equipment. The intense heat caused some damage to the projection equipment. The theatre is owned and operated by H. C. Morehouse. The loss is reported to be fully covered by insurance.

The Sunday closing question has turned out to be a real hot issue up in Florence, Colo. Not long ago Hobart Kincaid, owner of the Rialto theatre of Florence petitioned the city council for the privilege of operating on Sunday. The petition was signed by 100 business men of the city. The ministerial alliance very strenuously opposed the granting of this privilege. A compromise was reached where a special election was to be held on the subject, the expenses of the election to be stood jointly by the theatre interests and the ministers' organization. Then the ministers' body changed their mind and asked that the council dispose of the matter. The council voted on it this last week and the vote was a tie. The mayor, instead of casting the deciding vote, delayed further action on the subject. That is where the matter stands now.

J. T. Sheffield, owner of the Columbia exchanges in Salt Lake City and Denver and manager of the Denver exchange, left for Salt Lake City last week for a two weeks' visits with the branch office there.

William Jacobs, manager of the Denver theatre since the opening last November, has resigned and will engage in private business in Kansas City, Mo., the place from which he came. Announcement as to Jacobs' successor will be forthcoming in a few days from Barry Burke, theatre district manager for Publix in this territory. Mr. Jacobs formerly managed the Newman theatre in Kansas City, one of the Publix chain of theatres.

Tourists visiting the popular town of Manitou, Colo., will find W. T. Bedwell managing the Manitou theatre this summer, according to information received along film row this week.

Harry Evans of Colorado Springs has opened the Rialto theatre of Pueblo, Colo., with combined vaudeville and motion picture entertainment. The Pueblo Amusement Co., former operators of the theatre, recently went into voluntary bankruptcy.

Mr. and Mrs. R. C. Geating of the Lyric theatre, Chappel, Neb., were Denver visitors along film row last week.

E. C. Trieb, president of the Civic Theatres Co. of Roswell, N. M., spent the past week in Denver transacting business with exchanges and supply houses.

Cleveland

SCOVILLE, Essick and Reiff, pioneer circuit owners, who have always confined their activities in the film industry to Cleveland and its suburbs, are now reaching out to Willoughby, a small town some east of here. They have taken a twenty year lease on a 1,000-seat motion picture theatre there, which will be part of the new Masonic Temple, now in course of construction. The building will cost about $150,000. Lodge rooms will occupy the front, and the theatre will be located in the rear with a front entrance lobby, of course. The first story is nearing completion now so it will be some time in the summer before the theatre will be completed. John Graham of Cleveland is the architect.

Lee Chapman, formerly with Security Pictures, and H. Hirsch, prominent in film sales circles, have opened Independent Pictures, Inc., an independent exchange for the exclusive Ohio distribution of Rayart pictures. Lee Chapman is president and general manager. Hirsch is vice president and in charge of sales outside of Cleveland. Chapman will handle the city sales. Their offices are in 706 Film Bldg.

Herbert Ochs, First National office manager, is captain of the sales crews out to clean up all left over contract in the territory. Ochs will concentrate on one part of the state at a time, calling on every exhibitor in the district. He figures it'll take four weeks to write amen to the present selling season.

Jack Flynn, M-G-M district sales manager, paid local exchange manager Frank Drew a friendly call last week.

Carl E. Milliken, of the Hays organization, will be the guest speaker at the annual meeting of the motion picture division of the Federated Women's Clubs, which is scheduled to be held at the Statler Hotel ball room in Cleveland on Wednesday, March 21st.

Jack Gardner, who owned and operated the Superba theatre, Toledo, recently sold his house to Messrs. W. V. Archer, and Ralph Hallaner.

Maybe the Ohio Amusement Company is superstitious. Anyhow, they had 13 theatres in their circuit. And last week they sold one, just to make it an even dozen. They sold the Yale, St. Clair Ave. and East 81st St. to S. Vermes, who also owns the Eclair.

E. C. Grainger, of the Fox home office, was in the state last week dividing his time impartially between the Cleveland and the Cincinnati exchanges.

George Ryder, manager of Loew's Mall theatre, is ill. Ryder has been in poor health for some weeks.

Loew's Cameo theatre, under the management of Fred Coddington, invited 600 poor children to see Charlie Chaplin in "The Circus" free of charge. Coddington just gathered up a lot of youngsters that hadn't seen a show in ages and gave them the treat of their lives. And they certainly did appreciate it.

Florida

O. S. HAMMER and S. J. Fraser have taken over the Princess theatre in Lakeland, redecorating and giving it a thorough overhauling. They opened Friday of this week with the regular picture program but have arranged to stage a "Pageant Ethiopia" next Wednesday, using the elite of the colored population. The Princess is the negro theatre of the city.

The success of the Vitaphone presentations at the Victory, Tampa, looks so good to Manager George Peck that he has had a monster sign erected on the top of the theatre. The sign is nearly half a block long and has but one word on it, "Vitaphone."

When General Manager John B. Carroll, decided to reduce the price at the Tampa for a "Shoppers' Matinee" between the hours of 11 A. M. and 1 P. M. with a two-bit gate to all, he certainly picked a live one, for these morning shows are drawing well filled houses, while before, with the regular gate, there was little better than the proverbial "corporal's guard."

Th annual Sara-De-Sota celebration will pull the crowds to Sarasota next week. The Ringling Brothers circus, in winter quarters there, will donate the major part of their animals and 500 horses for use in the parades. Miss Nell Shipman, motion picture actress, has been chosen to reign for the week in the title roll, "Sara-De-Sota."

Mention was made in this column a few weeks ago of a rumor that a new neighborhood theatre was to be built in the Hyde Park section of Tampa. Rumor was correct in this case, as a building permit was issued this week to the Horne Building company of Tuscaloosa, Alabama, and the contract given to E. S. Moore & Son of St. Petersburg, Fla., for the construction of a theatre to cost $100,000. The theatre will be located on Lafayette street between Hyde Park and Magnolia avenues, and will extend through the block to Grand Central avenue.

The contract calls for a building of steel, concrete and hollow tile with terra cotta and stone trimmings. There will be a complete stage with dressing rooms and scenery loft and the house will have a seating capacity of 1,400. The theatre has been leased to the Patio Amusement Co. of St. Petersburg, who operate the Patio theatre there, and they will supply the equipment. B. C. Bonfoey is the architect and stated that the building and equipment would call for an investment around $200,000. Construction is to start at once.

After twenty weeks as master of ceremonies and orchestra director at Manager James Q. Clemmer's Fifth Avenue Theatre, Hermie King played his farewell engagement last week. Reports circulated recently to the effect that George Srigley had sold his Cameo Theatre at White Center to J. G. Maddux were this week denied by Mr. Sprigley. The deal had been pending, it was reported, but final arrangements fell through and Mr. Srigley retains the theatre.

The entire sales staff of the local Metro - Goldwyn - Mayer branch office arrived in town ast week for a brief sales conference with Manager Ben Fish. St. Louis

THE safe of the Rialto Theatre, Champaign, Ill., was opened by yeggmen the night of March 4. The robbers secured $500.

Clark Sample, the owner of the project, and it will be leased to the New Orleans amusement organization. The plans prepared by Emile Weil Company, New Orleans, call for a 2-story, 46 by 102 foot reinforced concrete, brick, stone and terra cotta building to cost about $150,000.

The City Council of Jefferson City, Mo., is wrestling with the question of Daylight Saving.

A bill has been submitted to the council calling for the installation of daylight saving regulations for May, June, July and August. The proposed ordinance will come up for final vote at the first meeting in April. Proponents of the plan have submitted petitions containing the signatures of about 500 business men, ministers, state officers and others.

The plan was tried out in Jefferson City during the World War.

All danger of Daylight Saving legislation in St. Louis blew up March 10 when officials of the Associated Retailers announced that the organization would not assume the leadership in any movement to have daylight saving hours brought back to St. Louis this year.

For several years the first robin brought with it a concerted drive in certain quarters for Daylight Saving. However, labor unions and the motion picture theatre owners aided by the Municipal Opera Association succeeded in killing all such bills.

Holman estate, for the purchase of an "L" shaped property which divides his present extensive holdings at Fourth and Market streets. With what he owned before the deal this gives him a very valuable plot fronting 76 feet on Market Street and extending 180 feet along Fourth street, close to the Regent theatre, and in the very heart of Harrisburg's business district.

Can Iris Be Used to Reduce Size of Spot?

THIS business of projecting motion pictures is certainly filled with surprises. A rather amusing one cropped up recently when the writer was one of a party of four who were out for an evening's inspection of theatres in one of the largest cities in the country.

The other three members of the party consisted of the Business Agent of the local union, the field representative of a large equipment manufacturer, and an editor who is widely known in projection circles and famed for his vociferous preachings on the abstruse subject of projection.

The "show-off" party was in honor of the visiting editor who was supposed to be properly impressed with the magnificence of the home town's leading theatres, but who, in reality, appeared to be a trifle bored with the endless vista of projection rooms which were being inspected.

While travelling from one theatre to another, the Business Agent, who was quite voluble, as properly becomes a business agent, maintained an endless conversation which revolved about projection matters both large and small. Later in the evening his conversation took a more personal turn and he began describing some of the peculiarities of the projectionists whose financial destinies he so ably controls.

He appeared to be especially concerned over the seeming stupidity of one projectionist in particular who stubbornly refused to accept the principles of projection as laid down by the Business Agent. After making various efforts to impress his listeners with the sheer ignorance of the projectionist in question, he wound up in disgust and exclaimed "well, you can imagine how dumb this bird is when he will argue with me for an hour that it is impossible to cut down the size of a 'spot' by closing down on the iris shutter. I simply couldn't convince him that it could be done."

This remark seemed to have the proper effect because the manufacturer's representative and the visiting editor solemnly agreed that anyone who would persist in the belief that it was impossible to reduce the size of a spot by closing down on the iris must be, indeed, a poor kluck.

Not So Dumb

After listening to a somewhat extended discussion concerning the effects of opening and closing an iris shutter attached to a spot lamp, the writer managed to slip in a remark, edgewise, to the effect that he believed the poor kluck in question to be absolutely right in his contention that the iris did not affect the size of the spot Whereupon the storm broke loose.

After a heated discussion which lasted about half an hour and during which the several participants switched several times from affirmative to negative, the issue had become so clouded with doubt that none of the parties knew exactly what to believe.

Aligned on one side of this affair was the Business Agent who was active in educational work among the members of his local and who prided himself on his knowledge of projection; the field representative of a large manufacturer, who certainly was in a position to accumulate a large amount of knowledge on all phases of projection; and a projection editor who, for years, had taken it upon himself to explain to projectionists the intricacies of various projection matters.

Yet all three were certainly wrong and it remained for a projectionist, cooped up in a theatre and without extended means for collecting information, to show that they were wrong.

If we are not mistaken, the editor in question is responsible for the statement that a spotlamp is a very simple affair and any projectionist, without previous experience, should be able to walk into a projection room and inside of twenty minutes make himself thoroughly familiar with all phases of its operation. Which could not be farther from the truth, because there are very few persons indeed who can satisfactorily explain the operation of a spotlamp in spite of its apparently simple construction. This matter of the iris shutter should indicate the truth of the above statement.

Action of Iris on Spot

The effect of opening and closing an iris shutter which is attached to a spotlamp will depend upon how the spotlamp is being operated at the time.

There are three distinct conditions in spotlamp operation, which result, in different effects when the iris shutter is manipulated.

First, there is the spot condition. That is, when the arc burner is pulled back from the condenser lens to give the smallest spot it is possible to obtain on that particular projection distance. This results in the formation of a true spot, in an optical sense, because a slightly out-of-focus image of arc crater is being focused on the stage.

Under this condition the entire condenser lens is "filled" with light for every point within the boundaries of the projected spot and if an observer were to stand on the stage and look toward the condenser lens he would see the entire area of the lens filled with the image of the arc crater. In other words, if the condenser lens measured 6 inches in diameter, the thing seen would be an arc crater 6 inches in diameter.

If the iris shutter is now partially closed in front of the condenser lens, the observer would see a smaller image of the crater in the lens, the size of this image being exactly equal to the iris opening. The spotlight operator, on the other hand, would see the spot on the stage gradually diminish in intensity but the spot would remain the same size. A slight reduction might occur, depending upon the extent of the out-of-focus effect of the crater with respect to the lens but in the extreme case where a true image of the crater was projected to the stage no reduction in size would take place, even though the iris were closed to a pinpoint in size.

This condition is similar to placing an iris shutter in front of the projection lens on a movie projector. Where this is done the picture size is not decreased but the intensity is reduced along with the iris opening.

Action of Iris on Flood

The second condition is one of extreme flood where the arc burner is pushed as close as possible to the condenser lens. When this is done, an observer standing on the stage would see a small image of the crater in the condenser lens and this image would only measure about ¾ of an inch in diameter, depending upon the particular spotlamp. The remainder of the lens area around this small crater image would be dark, indicating that no light was being received by the observer's eyes from that portion of the lens area.

The spotlamp operator, upon closing the iris, would see the size of the flood diminish rapidly as the iris was closed but no reduction in intensity would occur until the iris was reduced to less than ¾ inch opening.

Combination Spot and Flood

In between these two extreme conditions of spot and flood there are a large number of combination spot and flood conditions so that closing the iris at these points would result in changing both the size of the "spot" and also its intensity. The extent of the respective changes (whether size or intensity) would depend upon how closely the particular condition approached true spot or true flood. That is, if the spotlamp were worked close to the true spot condition, there would result a large reduction in intensity and a small reduction in size. If near the extreme flood condition, the reverse would be true as the reduction in size would be great and the intensity would fall off but little.

Reverting to the original argument, if a true image of the crater were projected to the stage, there would be absolutely no reduction in size of spot, as the iris was closed.

The presidential hope to be nominated by Democratic National Convention at Houston, Tex., is still in doubt—but there will be no doubt about the ventilation of the big auditorium now under rush construction. Four mammoth Typhoon 12-ft. fans, in addition to four 8-ft. fans, are to be installed for the main auditorium.

Managers' Institute Host to Projectionist

On Monday, February 27th, the Moving Picture Theatre Managers Institute was host to several officials of the Moving Picture Machine Operators Union, Local No. 306, at the Institute's headquarters, 135 West 44th St., New York City.

As an introduction to the course on supervision and maintenance of projection, the union officials were invited to speak to the students on relations between the manager and projectionist. Mr. Simon Terr, business agent, and Mr. Charles F. Eichorn, vice-president of Local 306, delivered short addresses on various phases of projection and projectionist labor problems.

Mr. Terr stressed the rising importance of projection in the successful operation of theatres. In part, Mr. Terr said, "The efficient manager of today spares no expense in providing the necessary equipment to insure perfect projection. The theatre-going public has been educated to the point that they are the first to discover imperfections in the presentation of pictures and decreased box-office receipts are very often the results."

In his discussion of the relations between projectionist and manager, Mr. Terr pleaded for a better understanding of each other's problems. He said, "A spirit of co-operation and good will, prompted by the better understanding of each other's work, will go a long way to cement a feeling of friendship between the projectionist and his employer."

Newspaper Opinions on New Pictures

"The Dove"—United Artists, Rialto Theatre, New York City

Evening World: "Is as good as she ever was. As artistically done as any she has ever appeared in."

Journal: "All very colorful, with Norma looking lovely."

Telegram: "An enjoyable picture. A skilled pictorial achievement. Is a film far above the average, and well worth your time."

Sun: "Is better than the rest of the films that came to town on Saturday last. As evidence of this its assets are hereby enumerated: the presence of Norma Talmadge in the cast, the fact that the picture has a story, the studio settings, which are lovely, and the rather engaging villain of the piece."

World: "Two excellent performances made vivid by a pair of dependable troupers, render a trip to the Rialto at this season rather a pleasure. The best damn caballero, and the sweet dancer of the Yellow Pig Cafe, those two characters who kept Mr. Belasco's production of 'The Dove' in the sell-out lists for months last year, have been taken over into the movies and handled with skill and fine effect. Will be considered good entertainment. Considerable color and warmth have been reflected in the settings and mountings. Interest is aroused and kept at a maximum by the consistent, intelligent, believable character acting of the principals."

Times: "An excellent picture. It is a pleasure to see Miss Talmadge in this film."

OPEN LETTER TO GOLFERS IN THE MOTION PICTURE INDUSTRY

Playgolf Bob Cotton

Dear Golfers:

You see, it was this way: For eleven years while covering the country selling FILLUM, folks would ask me if I played golf. Of course, I didn't—never had time. Haydn Duke and Carroll Trowbridge knew I always carried a lot of baggage (picture dope and statistics) so couldn't burden myself with clubs en route.

On leaving the industry a few months ago, I bethought me that I would just PLAY GOLF, so I went to a Pro, took two lessons and now I know all about it. Of course I couldn't exclusively Play Golf without making a living selling something. One day a SPECIAL REPRESENTATIVE for a Film Company made the remark to me that I couldn't even sell golf balls and every golfer used them. THAT MADE ME MAD and I bet him that I could sell 500 dozen to my friends in the picture business alone within a month, by just letting them know what I was doing.

So here is the offer, just to quickly introduce the "Playgolf" Ball. Send me a check for $7.00 and I will ship postage paid one dozen guaranteed seventy-five cent 1928 "Playgolf" golf balls. If you are not satisfied with the value received, after you have used two of these balls, return ten of them and I will immediately forward you a check for the $7.00, and Bob never failed to keep his word. Also take my word for it—this ball has click, durability, distance, balance, and putts true on the green. Felix Feist and John C. Flinn please note!

Of course, the idea is that I want to get in touch with the Pros on the whole "Playgolf" line, and you can help me by giving me the name of your club—if you are identified with one—the name of the Pro and his address.

THIS OFFER CANNOT BE REPEATED, there is nothing in it in the way of profit and too many film companies went on the rocks forgetting profits. YOU KNOW! I KNOW!! Anyway I'll take a chance on your first order knowing you'll become a regular user, so mail your check to

"Playgolf" Bob Cotton

P. S. Blair McElroy, why not let a dozen "Playgolf" golf balls accompany those clubs you usually carry in your Cadillac?

WASHINGTON THEATRE ENTERPRISES

SEATTLE, WASHINGTON

Mr. Earle W. Hammons, President,
Educational Film Exchanges, Inc.,
1501 Broadway,
New York City.

Dear Mr. Hammons:

In our endeavor to secure the very best short subjects -- best from the standpoint of clean entertainment and sustained interest -- we realized that, while there is an extensive market from which to choose, at the same time we could not afford to make any mistakes in our selection. The Public to which we will look for support with our beautiful new Mayflower Theatre will expect much.

In the little booklet sent you today you will note where our Mr. Casper Fischer, Vice-President and General Manager, says "the hand of the designer has been guided by the knowledge that a city of metropolitan progress will not long accept mediocre and inadequate entertainment in an atmosphere lacking congeniality and charm".

Therefore, in order to balance our programs with a measure of clean fun, adequate news service and exceptional educational values we found, after extensive viewings, that Educational Films completely filled our wants.

At this time we want to express our sincere appreciation of the splendid co-operation shown us at all times by your Mr. B. W. Rucker and his staff. We had thought to keep all references to our bookings out of the booklet, however, we were too much tempted to tell the public of our acquisition of Educational Films and have spread the fact in a special insert so that our patrons may feel assured of the very best.

Very truly yours,

The Honest Truth About
NEWS REELS

THE news reel is the brilliant jewel in your program of motion picture entertainment. It is more often remembered than your feature picture because it is more human, more alive, more pleasant and because—if it is the right news reel—it is possessed of a ton of personality.

This personality becomes a definite personal influence in your playhouse. If you choose wisely in picking from the six choices which the market now affords, you will do yourself an important business service that will continue to work for your prestige and profit every week in the year.

With six to pick from it would appear at first glance that you had a wide range of choice, but the facts as demonstrated by performance, show your choice is more restricted. And here's why:

A news reel first must have a scope that includes all the world as its field, with novelty, excitement, beauty, charm, human interest and natural comedy to choose from.

Then a news reel must have photographic clarity and beauty, perfect printing and eye soothing freshness.

These two elements are fundamental. These could almost be called the raw materials, and that narrows down your range of choice.

After these essentials you encounter the thing that makes the difference between the master product, the one with finish and drama, taste, intelligence and above all human interest, and the flat, dull, cut and dried offering.

This thing is handling!

Just as one newspaper is dull and another newspaper brilliant, so is a news reel, because of the brains, experience and enthusiasm of the men responsible.

This is the third element that narrows your range of choice and brings you closer to Kinograms as the one news reel essential.

The fourth is the fact that the makers of Kinograms make no other product whatever. All their time, energy and thought are centered on the production of the finest news reel on earth and it is this independence and this concentration on a specialty that have made the difference between Kinograms and all the rest.

Kinograms, by conscientious, painstaking and enthusiastic effort, has gained the premier place in the news reel field, and it has earned the unbiased praise of the most critical and most competent picture and attraction judges in the picture business.

A Common Sense Analysis

Governmental Interference Is Not the Solution

By William A. Johnston

AS announced in last week's issue, we print herewith an article by William H. McLaughlin, of the Stoneham Theatre Co., Stoneham, Massachusetts, in opposition to Governmental interference in the affairs of the industry. He writes:

"As an Independent Exhibitor who has followed closely the pros and cons of the Brookhart Measure I cannot see where the exhibitor would derive enough benefit from it to warrant Government control over this industry.

"After reading in The News, the Pettijohn Brief which deals with the issue technically, I would like to express a few common sense versions of the measure which I have formed. Before entering this industry, I manufactured and sold shoes for sixteen years, so therefore know something of what other industries are up against. So I take the liberty to make a few comparisons, particularly in regard to block selling.

"This industry is the same in basic principles as any other. The exhibitor is selling a commodity, which is amusement, the distributor is wholesaling it, and the producer is manufacturing it.

"Shoes, hats and other commodities are manufactured and sold to the wholesaler in dozens. The wholesaler must sell to the retailer in dozens, for, if he allowed him to pick the best from the dozen, what would he do with the remaining inferior articles, as perfection is unknown to the manufacturer? The same goes for the producer.

"Other industries are a step ahead of the motion picture industry as they have for a long period been going direct to the retailer and chain stores as an easier channel in which to merchandise their goods but they do not break lots and allow the retailer to select the individual article.

"We can go further than this and get away from the imperfections of merchandise created by the human hand and take nature's creations. The apple, banana and other fruit are not all of the same quality, size and taste, but must all be sold to the public. The wholesaler does not allow the retailer to pick ths best bananas off the stock. He must buy the bunch, the same as we buy the block. It is true he can select the bunch; so can the most of us. Although every banana is not the same size or quality in the bunch, the smart retailer sells them all to the public without throwing any away. He has to, as that is the way he has to buy them and his profit is in selling them all.

"The smart exhibitor can do the same thing. We often get some that are over-ripe at the box-office, but even if it is one of the more expensive pictures it can be shown with another feature or with vaudeville to dress it up. Would we go broke in a short time? Not necessarily, for along come such pictures as 'Behind The Front', 'Rookies' and many more that don't have to be dressed up and we get it back.

"Another comparison of merchandising. There may be—but offhand I don't know a manufacturer of any commodity that makes up his entire year's output and then sends his salesmen out to sell it. Generally, it starts from the other end. The salesmen start out with the samples and if the past year's business experience with the manufacturer has been satisfactory, the buyer will place his order to be made up and shipped to him at a future date with the confidence that the merchandise will be of the standard of the previous year. If it isn't, he does not know until he has handled the goods and then the next year is a different story. Why expect the producer to accept different economic conditions than these, for they are up against the same problems of merchandising that the other industries have?

"It might have been my inception into this industry from another that puts a different aspect on my viewpoint, than that held by those brought up in the industry and hardened into it. The prices for pictures were high in comparison to the returns at the box-office. Every distributor gave me a substantial reduction, although the merchandise had already been contracted for by me. If there is another industry that, after you have bought materials, will give you a reduction in price to keep you in business I have failed to hear of it. Most always, a trade is a trade and is final.

"The manufacturer in every line today is looking to the chain store or the mail order houses as the best outlet for their goods and when they can't get that outlet through price competition, if they are financially able, they start their own chain of stores. These are just economic conditions, so why not call in the Government to change the conditions in other industries, if you are going to in this? The answer is that other industries are old enough and wise enough to know that the benefit the Government might do, would be far outweighed by the difficulties encountered. It is a case of the survival of the fittest and the Government is not going to be able to fit the individual to survive to any greater degree than he is able to under the present conditions.

"The situation as it exists is not right, by any means, but the arguments against it are not strong enough to bring in the government to settle it, any more than they are in a score more industries. My observation in this industry has been that it has made money so fast and become so big over-night that when it finally came up against a lean period, that all other industries have been through, it has become panicky, and naturally the fellow who felt it first is turning to the government for his solution.

"It is only too true that money has been spent lavishly and extravagantly in this industry. It has been spent only for "Art for Art's Sake" but now that such men as Joseph Kennedy and other bankers have come into the industry, the art of business will be brought in, and in a very short time this problem can be solved within the ranks of the industry.

"This argument of exhibitor against producer leaves a parallel of thought in which crude logic works out a solution. The producer and exhibitor have both been travelling comfortably and easily along the highway of success, in their respective vehicles—the studio and the theatre. The highway becomes a little narrower and they both crowd a little to the other fellow's side, with the result of the usual jam or bump. Is it better to look for and call in the cop or straighten it out then and there, with possibly quite a lot of arguing, but very little hard work? The one who calls in the cop is on the unpopular side to start with. There are a lot of questions going to be asked both parties. Finally, both are going to be taken into court, with the result of a great deal of unnecessary publicity, more questions asked, the expense of lawyers and loss of time, the pulling of political wires and finally the appeal from the decision to higher court.

"Is it not better to repair the damage right then and there, have the heated argument out, fix up the dents and scratches with very little expense and continue along the highway to the ultimate destination. Success, without loss of time and more money? But don't call in the cop; he might ask unpleasant questions of both."

"The Trail of '98"

A BIG picture, easily of roadshow size, and big because of spectacular sequences—this is our opinion on "The Trail of '98," directed by Clarence Brown for M-G-M. More pointedly, it is a presentation of the right sort, by which we mean that the presentation is the picture itself, through the "Fantomscreen," of which more later.

As to the artistic greatness of "The Trail of '98," we don't know. Who does? But big at the box-office it will certainly be, unless we miss our guess.

The story is the Klondike Gold Rush, and is of epic dimensions. The cast—Dolores del Rio, Ralph Forbes, Tully Marshall, Karl Dane, Harry Carey, George Cooper, and others—is excellent, with Carey in the forefront as to honors, and Dane and Cooper mostly carrying the comedy.

The frenzied rush to the Klondike from all corners of America, and what happened to the individual in his or her fight against the perils of the North, form the story background.

The handling of the characters in this screen version of the Robert W. Service story is dwarfed by the spectacular features. These are four in number: a breath-taking snowslide; the running of the rapids in frail boats; the Chilkoot Pass stuff, with big panorama shots; and the burning of Dawson City.

For the snowslide sequence, the screen is suddenly enlarged to twice normal size, and moved down to the curtain-line. The effect is, of course, electrifying and carries a big punch. The same method is used with the running of the rapids, a remarkable spectacle. The "Fantomscreen" device, which moves the screen forward or back without interrupting the picture, is a great piece of showmanship.

The picture will be roadshowed by J. J. McCarthy, who handled the six great roadshows of the industry's history: "The Birth of A Nation," "Way Down East," "The Ten Commandments," "The Covered Wagon," "The Big Parade," "Ben Hur."

FRED KLEY, who, with James S. Douglass of the Hollywood-Argentine Cinema Company, will produce Tom Mix's forthcoming series of films in the Argentine for F B O release, talked this week of his plans.

For one thing he mentioned that his plan for producing in that vast territory south of the equator has been pooh-poohed and looked upon in a lugubrious light in Hollywood.

That there are possibilities for production on a large scale down in the Argentine, Mr. Kley firmly believes. Transportation facilities are excellent, the climate is most advantageous and the natural beauty of the land a fine background for the type of adventure picture Mix will star in. ''Furthermore,'' says Mr. Kley, ''we will have a simplified method of production. Our studio will not be cluttered up with 'assistants' who are the bane of Hollywood studios.''

The present trouble with Hollywood Mr. Kley characterized as incompetency and snap judgment on the part of many highly-paid executives; the fearful waste of time and money due to the conference system and the fact that there are too many ''assistants'' cluttering up the works, and the enormous salaries paid to the stars, which fact he lays at the door of the producers. ''Having experienced the hampering ties of these evils in studio production,'' said Mr. Kley, ''we shall distinctly avoid a sloppy and extravagant method of producing.''

WE went back, the other day, to see the revised version of "Tenderloin," the first photoplay "talkie." This is the Warner production, starring Dolores Costello, which got off to a bad start the opening night because of one speaking sequence in which the players were given ridiculous lines and the picture, at that point, dropped into typical melodrama of twenty years, or more, ago.

This sequence has now been entirely changed. The players are silent; lines formerly spoken by them via Vitaphone are covered in ordinary screen subtitles, and the total effect is much better.

There are now only two spoken sequences. The first is the third degree scene and that is O. K. The second is at the very end and climaxes in the singing of "Sweet Adeline"—quite naturally, by four of the players. The audience applauded it.

The elimination of the ridiculous sequence makes the other two far more effective; and gives strength to the picture. In fact, as it now stands, "Tenderloin" is a much better film with Vitaphone than it would be without it, which is the real test.

The two dialogue sequences give it novelty; the last one, particularly, because it incorporates a song sung as part of the action by the players themselves. This, we say, is a natural proceeding, and that is why it registers.

Whatever the defects of this first effort, the Warners deserve credit for blazing a trail. There is no question, in our mind, that the proper interplay of sound and silence on the screen is the next big development in the industry.

"Tenderloin" is the first real attempt at dialogue; it therefore is a picture that will have a distinct place in the history of the industry.

For the "talkies"—if we may use that term—a complete new technique will have to be worked out. It will not do, as was shown so clearly in the first version of "Tenderloin," to have ordinary subtitles turned into lines to be spoken by the players. If we are to have screen dialogue, it will have to be written by expert playwrights, or a new school of screen writers.

It is also very obvious that the new technique's hardest problem will be to decide when the screen should be silent and when it should talk. Naturalness will be the guide. If it is wholly natural to change from silence and go to sound; if the situation itself makes such a transition perfectly logical—that, it seems to us, is the deciding factor.

EARL HUDSON, who was in town the other day, gave us some very interesting observations on production activities in Hollywood, where he now lives. Of course, Earl was originally a newspaper man and naturally retains the powers of analysis and the sure eye for the salient thing, which are the first qualifications for successful newspaper work.

We recall with pleasure that Earl Hudson is a former member of the staff of Motion Picture News, and is one of our prominent alumni. Robert E. Welsh is another.

Earl, as all his friends know, is one of the keenest young men in this industry; and, with his wide and unusual experience in production as a background, his observations on Hollywood, and the film business in general, we found to be of great interest and value.

Bill Boyd wears a knowing grin—wonder what it's all about? Anyway he has something pleasant to chuckle over. The star of "The Volga Boatmen," "Dress Parade" and other De Mille pictures is a riveteer in "Skyscraper," a Pathe picture

They've finally found their American girl. After two years of searching for a lass who will best represent the nation's girlhood to be deified in "Glorifying the American Girl," Florenz Ziegfeld and Adolph Zukor have signed Ruth Elder for the leading role. Mr. Ziegfeld will co-operate with Paramount in the production which will be made this summer

Her features are being seen in quite a few films now—which is not strange if you have even seen Sharon Lynn as the feminine lure of a celluloid drama. She is a featured player in Universal's "Give and Take" and has played in several F B O films

Another mark of recognition for the showman. S. L. Rothafel as he received from Erno Rapee the Roxy Medal, a silver placque given by the Roxy staff

Allan Forrest and Betty Compson as they appear in "The Desert Bride," a new Columbia production

An attractive set of chorines headed by the gracious Dolores Costello as caught by the camera for a sequence in "Tenderloin," Warner Bros.' new Vitaphoned film

Buster Keaton in make-up for his comedy which Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer is producing. No title has been announced for it yet. Buster's poker face and comic pantomime will soon be seen in a new United Artists comedy, "Steamboat Bill, Jr."

Though the gentlemen look as if they were posing for an old-fashioned tin-type, they are really quite aware that it is all in fun. Trem Carr, Rayart producer, stands at the right, W. Ray Johnston, president of Rayart, is in the center, and Harry H. Thomas appears on the left. Mrs. Carr and baby Carmen are not to be overlooked either.

Richard Wallace, who has just directed a screen version of "Lady," Be Good," the Gershwin musical comedy hit, which First National will issue shortly. Wallace will be remembered for his direction of 'McFadden's Flats"

Paramount Granted Extension

Trade Commission Yields to Company's Request on Cease and Desist Order with Limit to Report Fixed as April 15

An extension of time in which to report whether the cease and desist order issued last July will be complied with was given Paramount Wednesday by the Federal Trade Commission, which fixed April fifteenth as the date on which the report must be filed. The Commission, on March 6, rejected the proposal for compliance with the order filed by Paramount last October, and announced its intention of proceeding with enforcement of its requirements. The extension of time was requested by the company, its application being taken to indicate that it will seek to avoid court proceedings.

The announcement by the Commission follows in full text:

''Counsel for Paramount-Famous-Lasky, in applying for the extension of time, explained that their attorney in charge of the case is now abroad on vacation, but is expected to return soon, and that counsel desired to have time in which to submit to him the matter of offering further compliance with the Commission's order.

''The Commission, on Mar. 5, disapproved Paramount's first report of compliance, submitted last November as an answer to the Commission's order to cease and desist of July 9, 1927, and announced that enforcement of the order would be sought.''

It is not likely there will be any anti trust proceedings brought against members of the motion picture industry by the Department of Justice until the deliberations have been concluded by the Interstate Commerce Committee on the Brookhart measure, according to latest advices from Washington. It is said that the Department of Justice is inclined to look with disfavor upon new legislation directed against the industry, and would prefer to carry on any necessary prosecutions under the present existing laws. Members of the department are said to feel that present provisions are ample to carry on any prosecutions deemed advisable.

It was suggested during the hearings on the Brookhart measure by members of the committee having it under advisement that the Department of Justice might be the avenue through which to proceed any motion picture concern that might be acting in violation of any of the laws.

The present discussion of the matter was aroused as the result of Paramount's answer to the Federal Trade Commission's order last July to cease and desist block booking. In its report of compliance Paramount denied any conspiracy for the purpose of lessening or restraining competition and issued instructions to various of its executives and exchanges to continue with their plans of block selling.

As a result of this order the Trade Commission was quoted as saying that proceedings would be inaugurated against Paramount at once to compel the company to comply with the cease and desist order. It was said that not only would Paramount be proceeded against, but that the commission was contemplating bringing a general suit in the Federal Courts against all companies in the industry that were carrying on the practice of block booking. This later procedure, it was argued, would hasten the ultimate decision and avert the necessity of bringing separate suits against the various companies.

The Department of Justice has long had the industry under investigation, and is said to have had agents working in various parts of the United States securing evidence of monopoly against a number of the companies. Suits that might be brought by the Department would be pursued under the evidence these agents have acquired.

Radio Broadcast Will Go On

Joseph M. Schenck Tells Woodhull If Exhibitors Object U. A. Stars Will Not Again Participate

The radio hookup of fifty-five stations over which six of the United Artists stars will broadcast as a part of the ninth anniversary celebration of the company on March 29th has brought about considerable discussion in many corners of the industry. As matters now stand the program will go on as originally announced, but it will be the last in which United Artists stars will appear. This is the statement of Joseph M. Schenck, president of United Artists, in a wire answering the protest of R. F. Woodhull, as president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, who addressed him in protest on the part of the exhibitors of the organization.

Al Lichtman, sales chief of United Artists, enters into the controversy with the statement that the broadcasting of the stars will stimulate, rather than hurt theatre attendance. He proposes that exhibitors install in their houses, as United Artists will do, loudspeakers over which theatre audiences may have a combined motion picture and radio program for the one admission. His contention is that this program will fill any motion picture house where there is a chance to both see and hear the artists.

''Articles in Variety and Morning Telegraph stated United Artists stars will take part in National radio hookup March 29th. Exhibitor opinion as expressed in our national office opposed to any such move. Believe same will depreciate value of stars in picture presentations as their artistic merit is expressed best in screen productions and must fall below that established standard if used on radio. Experience proves will also reduce theatre attendance, and such radio publicity of no future value. Please advise me.''

In his reply Mr. Schenck said:

''Extremely sorry your communication arrived too late as stars have signed contracts to appear on the air March 29th. If it is concensus of opinion of theatre owners that such radio hookup is detrimental to business I shall see that our stars do not in the future take part in a national radio hookup. We thought it would be beneficial and stimulate the interest of public in pictures. Kindest regards.''

Al Lichtman declared that many exhibitors are planning to capitalize on the radio program through the publicity given the event. He said that the Rivoli in New York, where Douglas Fairbanks in ''The Gaucho'' is playing, will have loudspeakers in the house on the night of the broadcast so that the audience can hear Fairbanks and the other stars talk from Hollywood. Lichtman has been advised that many other theatres are contemplating the same stunt.

To bolster his argument that the radio will stimulate rather than retard business, Lichtman points to the precedent set by Al Jolson in an earlier Dodge hour and the subsequent spurt taken by ''The Jazz Singer.'' This single precedent, according to the sales head, worked out to the advantage of exhibitors who followed up the broadcast with playdates of the broadcasting star's picture.

As the program lines up now the stars who will participate are Norma Talmadge, Charlie Chaplin, Douglas Fairbanks, David Wark Griffith, John Barrymore and Dolores del Rio. The broadcast is set for 9 P. M. Eastern time. If Ronald Colman and Vilma Banky have returned to America from England and Hungary, respectively, they will also broadcast. Paul Whiteman and his orchestra will play from New York, while the stars will talk from United Artists studio in Hollywood. Douglas Fairbanks will be master of ceremonies.

John Barrymore will recite the soliloquy from ''Hamlet,'' in wheih he created a record run of 101 performances in New York. Dolores Del Rio will sing ''Ramona,'' the song dedicated to her second United Artists picture, and Miss Talmadge will likely talk on fashions. She, and Chaplin and David Wark Griffith are now

"Lilac Time"

Reviewed by Edwin Schallert

Editor of the Los Angeles Times Preview and Special Correspondent of Motion Picture News

LOS ANGELES, March 17.—A new Colleen Moore is revealed in "Lilac Time." The little star of many farcical comedies gives a tender and sympathetic portrayal in this film adaptation of a stage success that won acclaim a few years ago with Jane Cowl in its principal role. Colleen has never had a finer chance to show what she can do as an actress than in this latest and, in many respects, most ambitious production of her career.

"Lilac Time" is easily more pretentious than anything that Miss Moore has appeared in since "Irene," and it has little or no resemblance to anything that she has played in since she became a popular hit in "Flaming Youth." Most of her pictures have been very light in theme and story, and several of her recent films so trivial in quality as hardly to advance her career.

"Lilac Time" will enlarge her group of admirers. It proves what she can do as an interpreter of pathetic emotion. While there is no actual similarity between the two stars, one keeps thinking from time to time, on viewing the picture, of "Smilin' Through," in which Norma Talmadge appeared several years ago.

The story of "Lilac Time" is about a little French girl and a British soldier in the air service. Colleen is the pet of the air forces, who are billeted in her parents' home. The soldier and she fall deeply in love, but he is forced to leave for the front, and meanwhile the village where the girl lives is destroyed.

The picture shows from stage to stage the obstacles that intrude upon their romance. The plot is a very simple affair, turning time and again upon the heartbreak of their separation from each other, and threaded always upon the constancy of their love. There is no more sure-fire theme than this in the theatre. Practically every picture that has expressed it in a beautiful way has been a great success.

"Lilac Time" has the additional attraction of some very fine air shots. Splendid photography is evident, especially where cloud backgrounds are used for the airplane maneuvers.

George Fitzmaurice, who directed, has seldom made a finer picture. He shows a wealth of feeling in the love scenes, and those depicting the unhappiness of the two leading characters because of the fate that keeps them apart. There are several scenes that will stir audiences deeply.

The picture is not devoid of comedy. There are some very funny episodes that show Colleen as a mischief-maker. These will be liked by all who prefer the star in her lighter moods.

The picture is very well-balanced entertainment, and has a good supporting cast headed by Gary Cooper as the British aviator. It is a film with very strong points of appeal, and will increase Colleen's popularity even over heretofore.

Pictures Affect Trade

Carl E. Milliken Tells Cleveland Advertising Club of Advantages from Films

STARTLING evidence of the motion picture's influence upon trade in American goods throughout the world was revealed in Cleveland Wednesday by Carl E. Milliken, former governor of Maine, and now secretary of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., in a speech before the Advertising Club of Cleveland, Ohio.

For every foot of film exported from this country, Governor Milliken said the Department of Commerce has determined, American busines secures a return of at least $1.00 in trade. The film has become an "animated catalogue" for American goods, he said, and people the world over are turning to the screen for direction in their purchases of goods, with the result that millions of dollars are being poured annually into the pockets of business men, whether they deal in soap, automobiles, harness, dressgoods, cosmetics, or what not.

Last year foreign exports of film from this country amounted to 231,995,018 feet, for distribution in the 30,000 motion picture theatres outside of this country.

"Every day we get these reports of the potency of the motion picture as a trade getter," said the secretary of the Will H. Hays Association. "Without being consciously in the business of advertising American wares, the film nevertheless exerts a far reaching influence.

"The farm housewife sees a new labor-saving device and she purchases it. Her husband sees a new agricultural implement. Their daughter gets an idea for a new dress. The son of the house discovers the type of overcoat he wants. In one picture a famous star used a special perfume, the name of which, as it happened, was easily identified, with the result that that brand of perfume had a tremendous vogue.

"Because of motion pictures, a certain type of California bungalow has come into wide use in South American countries. Because they have formed a pleasant background for so many pictures, swimming pools at private houses have come into very general use. Because they were being forced to install new machinery to make shoes like those the American movie queens wear, shoe manufacturers of Great Britain protested not long ago. Because stenographers of Paris saw the well lighted and well ventilated, roomy offices as shown in American films, Dr. Toulouse, a distinguished French psychologist, says they demanded, and are getting, similar comforts.

The film, in thus acquainting all parts of the world with our goods, is equivalent to the work of 100,000 salesmen, Mr. Milliken declared.

M. J. O'Toole Addresses Rotary and Lions Club

"If you have a civic program that is worth while do not keep it a secret, but let the public know about it," was the message Business Manager M. J. O'Toole, of the M. P. T. O. A., brought to a joint meeting of the Rotary and Lions Clubs of Sayre, Pa., and Waverly, N. Y., Tuesday night.

The meeting was well attended as "Motion Picture Night" and Mr. O'Toole declared that the theatre grew and developed as the community expanded and that the lines of co-operation could always be helpfully established.

He urged the Rotarians and Lions to hold a "Legislative Night" and invite the Congressman from the district to attend and make a report on what was going on at Washington and have these civic leaders suggest lines of procedure to him.

Buffalo T. O.'s Ball to Be Held on April 12

Following a special meeting of Chairman Jules Michael and his committee on arrangements last Saturday in the Root building headquarters of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners Association (Buffalo zone) of New York state, plans were taking shape rapidly today for the first annual ball of the organization to be held in the Broadway auditorium on the evening of Thursday, April 12.

The committee took up the matter of carnival features in connection with the ball.

Two Prominent Exhibitors Seriously Ill

Louis Buettner, of Cohoes, N. Y., one of the pioneer exhibitors in that part of the state, is dangerously ill at his home. Mr. Buettner's illness took a turn for the worse one day last week and but slim hopes were held at that time for his recovery.

Bill Smalley of Cooperstown, N. Y., owner of a chain of a dozen or more theatres, is seriously ill from threatened pneumonia. Mr. Smalley's condition is such that he is under the care of two physicians and a trained nurse.

Medal Tendered Roxy by His Theatre Staff

A PERPETUATING medal award for the motion picture industry was created this week at a dinner at the Hotel Plaza given by the Roxy Theatre organization in honor of its director, S. L. Rothafel. The award is known as the Roxy Medal and was presented to Roxy by the theatre's organization. It is in the form of a ten-inch silver placque, modeled by Jukio Kilenyi, bearing a likeness of Roxy and the following legend, "Awarded to S. L. Rothafel for the greatest achievement in the moving picture world during the year 1927."

The conditions contingent with the presentation of the medal provide that Rothafel perpetuate the medal as an annual award which he is to present each year to the individual responsible for the best achievement in the film industry throughout the world.

The dinner marked the culmination of the first year of operation of the Roxy Theatre during which period all previous world records for attendance and receipts were surpassed. The guests of honor on the dais included directors of Fox Films, George W. McClelland, representing the National Broadcasting Company, and others.

Agreement Ends Strike of Louisville Union Men

Union musicians, stage hands and operators in four Keith-Albee houses in Louisville, Ky., Wednesday prepared to resume their former positions at the theatres after an agreement had been reached to end a strike which had lasted several months.

The agreement was made between Pat Casey, representative of the Vaudeville Managers' Protective Association; a committee of union employees, and William Canavan, president of the International Alliance of Theatre Stage Employees, Mr. Casey announced. Fred J. Campbell, manager of the Keith theatres, said he did not know the terms of the settlement.

George P. Laffel, president of the Musicians' Union, and five other persons were held to the grand jury March 1 in connection with the alleged throwing of stench bombs in the theatres during the strike. It was expected the prosecutions would be stopped, following settlement of the difficulties.

Pawtucket's "Blue" Law May Be Amended

Provision of the Rhode Island State law, which prohibits Sunday shows at Pawtucket, although permitting them elsewhere in the State, subject to certain regulations concerning hours, would be amended in a bill introduced in the House. A similar bill to include Pawtucket in the entertainment law has been on the file of the House judiciary committee since the first week of this year's session.

Schine Enterprises Adds Ohio House to Chain

DeMille-Kennedy Confer on Future Plans

General Impression is That Producer Will Sign New Contract With United Artists

SPECULATION continues rife as to the outcome of Joseph P. Kennedy's reorganization of Pathe's production forces and just what Cecil B. De Mille will do with regard to severing relations with the company. It seems to be the general impression on the west coast that De Mille is probably now making his last picture for Pathe release and that his next contract will be with United Artists. It is intimated in some quarters that De Mille will be under contract with United Artists by July.

Joseph P. Kennedy and De Mille are said now to be in the midst of a series of conferences at Los Angeles by which future activities of both will be determined. Meantime contracts for all independent producers releasing through Pathe have been cancelled in the reorganization of the company which is in progress. Some of the F B O executives, it is said, will be transferred to the De Mille studios and it is also said that all F B O production in the future may be centered at the De Mille plant.

Meantime renewals are being offered and options taken up by Pathe pending reorganization, but many of these are waiting the result of the conferences now on between Mr. Kennedy and De Mille. Among those who are reported to have refused proffered Pathe contracts at least until the present controversy is concluded is Marie Prevost. She is said to be desirous of remaining with De Mille and she will sign only in the event that he comes to an amicable agreement with Mr. Kennedy. She is also reported to be considering two other offers.

There are several angles that lead those who have been following the controversy to believe that De Mille will not continue his Pathe contract unless he is given a free rein to continue with his production activities. He is not expected to agree to a tightening up of production costs, which it is likely Mr. Kennedy will insist upon. Then, too, the producer is not renewing the contract of Lana Basquette nor of Clarence Burton, who has been with him for the past twelve years.

While the discussion is on word comes from the Pathe offices of a number of pictures in production at the De Mille studios. He is personally directing "The Godless Girl," from the story by Jeanie MacPherson. Others in production are: "The Cop," with William Boyd and Alan Hale; "Man Made Women," in which Leatrice Joy is starred, and "Tenth Avenue," with Phyllis Haver, Victor Varconi and Rudolph Schildkraut. Two pictures now being edited are, "Walking Back," with Sue Carol, Richard Walling, Ivan Lebedoff, David Torrence and Jane Keckley, and "Hold 'Em, Yale," with Rod La Rocque.

Aronson and Browne Sell N. C. Holdings

THE Raleigh Theatres, Inc., subsidiary of Publix-Saenger Theatres, Inc., of North Carolina, last Saturday acquired control of the Palace Theatre in Raleigh from Aronson and Browne. The latter firm has also sold their various theatre interests, A. B. Huff, formerly owner of the High Point, N. C., having purchased the Grand and Oasis Theatres in Kingston, N. C., and O. T. Kirby, owner of the Palace in Roxboro, taking over the Castle Theatre in Wake Forest, N. C.

The foregoing transactions close out Aronson and Browne after 37 years in the show business.

Negotiations are said to be pending for the acquisition by Saenger-Publix of the Capitol in Raleigh, owned by the Stevenson chain. If the deal is consummated, Publix - Saenger will have control of the situation in Raleigh, the company having acquired the State and Superba more than two years ago. A report that the Superba was to be closed was denied by Publix-Saenger.

New Ohio Theatre Opened at Columbia March 17

The opening of the new Loew's and United Artists' Ohio theatre at Columbus, Ohio, took place last Saturday, March 17th. The house, seating 3,000, and located directly opposite the State Capitol, is said to have cost in the neighborhood of $3,000,000. Thomas Lamb is the architect.

The Ohio featured as its initial presentation "The Divine Woman" as the screen feature, and "Milady's Fan," a Publix-Loew unit, as the presentation. The picture-presentation policy will be adhered to. J. Everett, assistant manager of the Broad in Columbus, is managing the Ohio. Bert Williams is directing the 25-piece orchestra. Henry B. Murtaugh is presiding at the organ console. George Lyons is master of ceremonies.

Theatre Man Loses $4,500 Payroll to Bandits

Harvey M. Hobbs, assistant manager of Keith's theatre, in Syracuse, N. Y., was hit over the head by two masked bandits shortly before the noon hour last Saturday and robbed of approximately $4,500, the weekly payroll. Hobbs had been to the bank and obtained the money, and was walking through the lobby on the way to his office when a couple of masked men suddenly stepped in front of him and, while one hit him with a blackjack, the other held a revolver at his stomach. Hobbs did not lose consciousness from the blow and held onto the sack of money for a few brief seconds, only to have it grabbed by one of the men, the pair then darting out of the theatre and into the crowds.

Loew's Theatres, N. Y., Purchases Loew's Cleveland Chain

LOEW'S THEATRES, INC. of New York, has purchased the chain of theatres operated in Cleveland as Loew's Ohio Theatres, Inc. While Loew's Theatres, Inc., has always held an interest in the Loew's Ohio Theatres, Inc., the control of the circuit has heretofore been in local hands, headed by Joseph LaRonge, Edward Strong and Fred Desberg. The deal is reported to have been closed in Orange, N. J., between Nick Schenck and David Bernstein, representing Loew's Theatrs, Inc., and Joseph LaRonge, Edward Strong and Fred Desberg, representing Loew's Ohio Theatres, Inc.

Thirteen motion picture houses are involved in the transaction, with a money value of between $7,000,000 and $10,000,000. The thirteen theatres are the Stillman, Allen, State, Park, Mall, Granada, Metropolitan, Cameo, Circle, Liberty, Doan, and the Heights. All are either first-run downtown houses, or first-run neighborhood houses.

The Colonial and Ohio theatres, which are owned personally by La Ronge and Strong, are not involved in the deal.

A dispatch from Orange signed by LaRonge stated that successful completion of the sale of the Cleveland theatres may mean the Cleveland men will have plans for theatre developments in other nearby Ohio cities.

The announcement that Loew's Theatres, Inc., had taken over the local houses, came as a complete surprise. The local office of Loew's Ohio Theatres, Inc., when asked for a statement, said that it had no further comments to make, other than that there would be no change in theatre policy.

Sapiro Dinner Planned

T. O. C. C. Will Be Host To President of New Cooperative Association of Exhibitors

AARON SAPIRO, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors Association, Inc., recently organized New York buying combination, will be the guest of honor at a dinner to be given by the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce of New York at the Ritz Carlton Hotel on April 16th.

Among those who will be invited to meet Mr. Sapiro are Adolph Zukor, William Fox, E. F. Albee, Nicholas M. Schenck, Carl Laemmle, Samuel Spring, Louis B. Mayer, Jesse L. Lasky, Sidney R. Sarnoff, Otto H. Kahn, Adolph S. Ochs, Victor Polatchek, Arthur Brisbane and Bernard M. Baruch.

Out of this dinner, which it is announced is to welcome Mr. Sapiro to the industry, it is expected complete harmony will come. It is thought that Mr. Sapiro will announce the policies of the new organization and that they will show the benefits of cooperation between exhibitor and producer.

The Motion Picture Exhibitors Association, Inc., had its first regular meeting and election of officers at the Hotel Astor in New York City Monday of this week. The officers elected were, Mr. Sapiro, president; J. Arthur Hirsch, vice-president; Lawrence Bolognino, treasurer, and Herbert R. Ebenstein, secretary. The executive committee is made up of Leo Brecher, Samuel Berman and Max Richter, while on the board of directors are, Leo Brecher, Samuel Berman, Max Richter, Bernard Grob, J. Arthur Hirsch, William A. Landau, Samuel Lesselbaum, Elias Mayer, Edward Rugoff, Henry Segal, Rudolph Sanders, Samuel Schwartz, Harry Suchman and Harman Yaffa.

The entire thirtieth floor of the building at 580 Fifth Avenue has been leased by the organization, which will be ready for business within a week.

Meeting for Unaffiliatec Exhibitors Planned

Keith-Albee Reported to Be After Ontario Site

Keith-Albee interests, represented by Thomas W. Brady, Toronto, are negotiating for the purchase of a large site in London, Ontario, next to the new London Hotel, on which it is proposed to erect a large theatre. The offer of purchase is being considered by the London City Council, the property being owned by the municipality.

There are Keith theatres in Toronto, Ottawa, Montreal and Quebec.

First National Executives Feted on Eve of Sailing

Samuel Spring and E. Bruce Johnston, First National's vice-president and treasurer and vice-president in charge of the foreign department respectively, were dined by their fellow First National executives at the home of Clifford B. Depinet, general sales manager, and Mrs. Depinet; Mr. and Mrs. Ralph I. Poucher, Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Smith, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Boothby, Mr. and Mrs. H. A. Bandy, Mr. and Mrs. Jerome Beatty, Mrs. Florence Strauss, and Mr. and Mrs. R. W. Perkins.

Messrs Spring and Johnston sailed for Europe on the SS Olympic March 16 for a trip of several months. They will visit the First National exchanges in Europe and look into their company's production activities in England and Germany.

$250,000 Albany Blaze Razes Adjoining Theatres

Fire starting in the Clinton Theatre building, in Plattsburgh, N. Y., last Saturday morning, swept the adjoining Plattsburgh Theatre building as well as gutting several stores with a resultant loss of $250,000. The two theatres were owned by William Benton of Saratoga Springs, who has a chain of houses along the northern border. The fire raged for six hours before being placed under control.

The Clinton has been closed for about three years. It is said that the fire started from defective wiring. Ralph J. Henry, manager of the Plattsburgh, was badly cut about the wrist by broken glass.

Mr. Benton said that he was covered by insurance, but was undecided as to whether or not he would rebuild.

6,000,000 at N. Y. Houses

Weekly Attendance Figures Approximate that Number At Motion Picture Theatres of State

JAMES WINGATE, director of the New York State Motion Picture Division, has revealed some interesting statistics regarding attendance and pictures at motion picture houses in the state, among them being that 6,000,000 tickets are sold each week for showings in the picture houses. This is an approximate figure for the 1,450 picture houses in the state, more than 600 of which are in New York City.

The Motion Picture Division figures after allowing for those persons who attend the picture houses twice or even oftener each week, it is probable that approximately half the entire population of the state attends at least one motion picture theatre each week. Justifying the rigid supervision of motion picture films by the Division, Mr. Wingate points out that more than 700,000 of the weekly admissions are sold to boys and girls under sixteen years of age.

Along with the report Mr. Wingate points out the manner in which films move in cycles. This is particularly so with current event and educational films, which may be exhibited without inspection. The year 1921 was the first that the state supervised films and in that year such educational films were released in the number of 6,194. Figures for the following years illustrate the cycle movement: 1922, 326; 1923, 301; 1924, 987; 1925, 592; 1926, 651; 1927, six months, 425.

In 1921, 7,524 new films were released in New York State, and 745 eliminations were made by the State officials. In 1922, 3,703 films were released, with 3,945 eliminations; 1923, 3,144 films released, 2,881 eliminations; 1924, 3,855 films released, 3,780 eliminations; 1925, 3,902 films released, 4,236 eliminations; 1926, 3,184 films released, 1,277 eliminations; six months of 1927, 1,798 films released with 949 eliminations.

Warners' Arbitration Fight Due for Hearing in Seattle Court

DESPITE the efforts of Gabriel L. Hess, general attorney of the Hays organization, to bring about an amicable settlement, the controversy between Warner Bros. and Waldo C. Ives, an Anacortes, Washington, exhibitor is to have a court hearing. Ives recently secured a temporary injunction restraining execution of the award made by the arbitration board in favor of Warners, and it is to be heard in the district court in Seattle March 27th.

Attorney Hess made every effort to bring about a settlement out of court, but Warners refused to accede to the exhibitors demand that the first decision of the arbitration board in favor of Ives be allowed to stand.

The action is based on substitutions made in pictures bought by the exhibitor from Warners' campaign book. The first decision of the board was in favor of the exhibitor, but an appeal by Warners brought a decision in their favor in the second hearing.

Society of Engineers Issues Program

Estimate 400 Will Attend Spring Meet in Hollywood April 9-14

THE Spring Meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers to be held at the headquarters of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, Hollywood, Calif., April 9-14, 1928, promises to be one of the most interesting and constructive conventions in the history of this organization and special stress is laid on the importance of all members being present in recent statements by J. I. Crabtree and L. C. Porter, executives of the Society.

This is the first occasion on which an opportunity has been presented for the various technicians in the East to confer with those of the West on research matters, and many valuable results from this contact are anticipated. In addition to members of the S. M. P. E., the groups present will include the three Coast organizations of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences and the American Society of Cinematographers.

It is estimated that there will be at least 400 in attendance at the banquet, with rumors of Will Rogers as toastmaster, addresses by Douglas Fairbanks, Cecil De Mille, Jeanie McPherson, and a skit by Charlie Chaplin in person.

According to reliable sources of information motion picture studios are going through a revolutionary period at the present time, passing from a "hang the expense" condition to a sound, scientific engineering basis of operation. Indicative of this is a $150,000 test which is being conducted, comparing various lighting equipment and methods, as well as different makes of film. This entire work, which has involved the taking of 70,000 feet of experimental film, is to be summarized and presented at this convention.

It is already quite evident that studio lighting is going over to mazda lamps. This change will involve, during the next year, the scrapping of a very large amount of equipment, and replacing it with new apparatus. At the convention will be thrashed out the need for new lenses corrected for Mazda lighting and panchromatic film, new color filters, the replacing of D C motor generator sets with 115 volt A C equipment in the studios, the design of new types of lighting equipment, the formation of a research laboratory for the motion picture industry, automatic machine development of negatives, etc. The papers program is sufficiently diversified to be of interest and value to every single one, no matter what his line of work.

New Orpheum, Seattle, Changes Policy, Prices

SUFFERING from the competition of de luxe picture theatres and stellar vaudeville attractions at other houses, the New Orpheum Theatre in Seattle, Washington, last week announced a revised plan of operation and a new price scale, effective immediately. The house, formerly a two-a-day thatre reserving seats for every performanc except Sunday at a 75c top, now becomes a continuous policy grind house, with four feature pictures and three vaudeville shows daily and Sunday at a reduced top price of 50c.

The Orpheum has been a Seattle institution for more than twenty years, having been the only vaudeville theatre reserving seats. At the height of its popularity a few years ago it was a $1.50 top house. The new price scale places the Orpheum prices below those of Pantages, offering similar shows at 65c, and also below the prices at the new Seattle Theatre and the Fifth Avenue Theatre.

Censorship Fees Netted Ontario $17,000 Profit

The Province of Ontario derived a revenue of $37,837.60 through the censorship of moving pictures with the reel fee during the fiscal year of 1927, according to the official financial statement of the Government at Toronto, while the expenses of the Ontario Board of Moving Picture Censors for the year were $20,495.93. A balance of over $17,000 was therefore recorded for the Province.

The chief item in the censors' expenditures was $15,376.46 for salaries of permanent employees. J. C. Boylen, acting chairman of the Ontario Board, received $3,200 in salary, including a special allowance of $500 for his executive work. Six other members were paid $12,155.63 altogether. Remuneration of $2,584.47 was also paid to several others, under the heading of contingencies.

Various other items included fees to oculists for the periodic examination of the eyes of the censors, mechanical equipment, office goods and printing.

Fox-B&K Seek Chi Houses

Enter Competition for Marks Bros. Marbro and Granada and Cooney's Avalon and Capitol

BALABAN AND KATZ and Fox are reported to be in keen competition for the purchase of a number of Chicago houses that each is anxious to annex for its circuit. With the two concerns in negotiation with the owners the outcome of the dickers is being looked forward to with considerable interest along Chicago's film row.

The houses involved are said to be the Marks Brothers and Cooney theatres. The Marbro and Granada are owned and operated by Marks Brothers and they are among the most beautiful of the Chicago houses. Negotiations are said to have been under way for them for some time by Balaban and Katz, and now Fox is reported to have entered the field for them. None of the conditions for their reported proposed sale have yet been revealed.

The Cooney houses that seem to be much desired by Fox and Balaban and Katz in their desire to bolster their holdings in the Windy City are the Avalon and Capitol, two other elaborately equipped houses.

These four houses of the Marks and Cooney interests are among the most important of the strictly modern de Luxe neighborhood theatres in Chicago that are not already embraced in the Balaban and Katz chain and the houses conducted by companies affiliated with Balaban and Katz in their Chicago operations.

Maberry has had wide experience in the film industry both in the distribution field and as an exhibitor. His initial motion picture affiliation was as a theatre owner in 1910, when he opened and managed several theatres in St. Louis. He goes to Columbia from an association of four years with P. D. C. and Pathe as Middle West Division Manager. Previously he was with the Goldwyn Corporation for five years as branch manager in St. Louis and Chicago, and then as District Manager in the Middle West.

Immediately upon his appointment by Columbia, Maberry left for a three weeks' trip through the middle west to visit exchanges and to consult with exhibitors and circuits in the territory.

10 P.C. Italian Exhibitions Must Be Italian-Made

The Lichtbildbuhne states that the Italian film decree imposes that at least 10 per cent of film exhibitions to be shown in the cinemas in Italy be made up of Italian-made features. The theatres are to keep a record of their films, so as easily to show the percentage of Italian films exhibited. This control will be operated by the "prefectures" and also by employees of the Ministry of Commerce. The Italian directors further must pay the same price in rent for Italian films as they are paying for foreign films. The renting price must be at least 25 per cent of the total income of the theatre after deduction of taxes.

From now on the proportion will be 160 to 16.

Jack Holt Still Under Contract to Columbia

TO clarify the report that Jack Holt has returned to the Paramount studio, Columbia Pictures has issued a statement that the actor is still under contract to them.

After completion of "The Warning," Holt's latest Columbia feature, production dates on the star's future vehicles were postponed until the 1928-29 program. Upon completing his two pictures for Paramount he will return, it is said, to the Columbia lot to appear first in a special production set for next season. His absence from the Columbia studio is not an indication that he has broken his contract with Columbia, says the statement.

Country Store Legal, Rules Colorado Judge

COUNTRY stores at theatres are legal in Colorado, was the ruling laid down by Judge George F. Dunckley in a directed verdict of trial of Rick Ricketson and Dick Dickson, for staging a country store at the Queen Theatre in Denver. An appeal to a higher court is forecast.

Judge Dunckley declared that the fact that free tickets were distributed at country store attractions excluded the practice from the law against lotteries. District Attorney Foster Cline, it is reported, will appeal the legal aspects involved in the case for a Supreme Court ruling. Messrs. Ricketson and Dickson were represented in the case by Attorneys Frederick Sass and Charles Morris.

The German share of the total number of feature films censored during January, 1928, was 40 per cent, as compared with 50 per cent in December, 1927, and 40 per cent in November, 1927.

Famous short stories in two reels is the project started by Frank P. Donovan. Each subject will feature well-known players and produced on a feature scale, but without color photography. Each story is the filmed work of an internationally known author.

The authors and stories have box-office value, having been read by thousands of people, avers Donovan. If they will go to see a favorite magazine story done in feature length, then they will go to see a popular story in short reel length, he holds.

The first completed is “The Necklace,” by De Maupassant. In this Mary Alden, Jean Girard, Maurice Costello, William Strauss, Bill Cody, Emil Chautard and others appear. The next is “The District Doctor,” by Ivan Turgenev. This will be followed by stories by Poe, Eliot, Stevenson, Hugo, Crawford, Gogol, Balzac, Pushkin, Bjorenson and others. No marketing arrangements have as yet been made.

Miss Elder's present vaudeville engagements will keep her occupied until June 5. Five days later she will start a tour of the United States in a monoplane. She expects to end her tour in Los Angeles July 1 when she will start her film work.

N. Y. Censor Repeal Bill Defeated

For the sixth time in as many years the motion picture censorship repeal bill went down to defeat in the New York state legislature with a strict party vote being recorded in the Assembly. Republicans to a man voted against the bill that had been introduced during the early part of the session by Assemblyman Irwin Steingut, a Democrat of Brooklyn. Even if this bill is introduced and brought to a vote in the Senate this week, as is extremely doubtful, it will not have the ghost of a chance, for the Senate is also Republican. The voting on the Steingut measure attracted considerable attention, although not to the extent of other years when censorship repeal was one of the live issues at the state capitol and when there was a far better chance of passage than this year, through the fact that the Senate under James J. Walker, as leader, stood Democratic.

The Steingut bill received the united support of every Democratic member of the Assembly. Before the vote was taken there were plenty of arguments in favor of the bill from Assemblyman Maurice Bloch, Democratic floor leader; Assemblyman Louis A. Cuvillier, and Frank A. Miller, all of the metropolis.

Assemblyman Russell G. Dunmore, of Oneida county, Republican floor leader, in a speech, urged his associates to vote against the passage of the censorship repeal bill and they followed his instructions to the letter.

Animosity Towards U. S. Films Grows in Spain

American films, which comprise 75 per cent of foreign pictures shown in Spain, are meeting a growing opposition. Spanish film interests will hold a meeting in Madrid late this month to formulate a policy towards foreign-made pictures.

The sentiment against the American film has taken voice in charges ranging from immorality to stirring a social unrest. The domestic film interests do not regard an increase of the tariff as providing a solution, rather a strict censorship which will greatly curtail the circulation of United States films in the Spanish market, is more to their liking.

Brenon Will Film Fannie Hurst's "Lummox"

"Lummox," the novel by Fannie Hurst, will be transferred to the screen by Herbert Brenon, who recently purchased the motion picture rights. The authoress will collaborate with the director in preparing the scenario and production will not start until the end of August. Meanwhile, Brenon will make a feature film for Samuel Goldwyn; it should be under way, it is said, by the middle of April.

F. N. Selects Stories

Richard A. Rowland Returns from Coast Pleased With Product Now Being Made and Due Shortly

RICHARD A. ROWLAND, general and production manager for First National, and Florence Strauss, head of the story purchasing department of the company, are back in New York from West coast conference where, with studio executives, they have been considering product for the coming season. Both are enthusiastic over the pictures now being made and those that will go into work during the season.

"In no previous year," said Mr. Rowland, "have I noticed such confidence in the quality of the pictures being made. Economies that have been effected are calculated to prevent any wastage and to bring the greatest possible return on money invested in production.

"I saw enough of 'Lilac Time' the Colleen Moore-George Fitzmaurice special to guarantee that it is going to be a stirring romance. Two comedies that are going to take a front place among the successes of the season are 'Vamping Venus,' with Charlie Murray, Louise Fazenda and Thelma Todd, and 'The Big Noise,' with Chester Conklin."

Among other successes predicted by Mr. Rowland are, "Lady, Be Good," with Jack Mulhall and Dorothy Mackaill; "The Yellow Lily," with Billie Dove; Alan Dwan's "Mad Hour"; Ken Maynard's "The Upland Rider," "Three Ring Marriage," featuring Mary Astor and Lloyd Hughes and others.

Mrs. Strauss expressed delight over the success of the conference in selecting new story material for such stars as Colleen Moore, Richard Barthelmess and Billie Dove. During the past six months a number of stage and book successes have been purchased by First National and others are to follow shortly.

Among the stories announced by Mrs. Strauss was an original by Edmund Goulding for Colleen Moore, "The Other Tomorrow," an Octavus Roy Cohen novel for Billie Dove, "Diversion" for Richard Barthelmess and "Two Weeks Off," by Kenyon Nicholson, author of "The Barker," for Jack Mulhall and Dorothy Mackaill.

Ten new productions are now in work at the First National studios. They include, "The Yellow Lily," with Billie Dove; "The Hawk's Nest," Milton Sills vehicle; "Roulette," with Richard Barthelmess; Harry Langdon in an untitled story, a new Ken Maynard story, "Heart to Heart," with Colleen Moore; "The Divine Lady," with Corinne Griffith; Sam Rork's production of "The Whip"; "The Butter and Egg Man," with Jack Mulhall and Molly O'Day, and "The Boss of Little Arcady," in which Charlie Murray is the featured player.

Haines Male Lead in New Marion Davies Feature

William Haines will have the masculine lead in Marion Davies' new picture, still untitled, which King Vidor is directing for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. James Murray, who was to have played this part, has been ill and will be unable to resume work for several weeks. The film also marks the first time these two stars have been paired.

Scenes in the production call for Miss Davies to eat lunch in the studio commissary, visit the wardrobe where feminine stars are having a fitting, work on adjoining sets to see other stars, and in general meet very nearly everyone in the studio.

Lon Chaney, John Gilbert, Greta Garbo, William Haines, Ramon Novarro, Tim McCoy and Norma Shearer will appear as themselves in the production. In addition to these ‘‘honorary-bit’’ players, the cast includes Polly Moran, Paul Ralli and Del Henderson.

Joint Move May Cut Exchanges for Shipping Stations

DISTRIBUTORS are planning, as one means of economy in the distribution of pictures, joint stations out of which they will all ship. These stations will supplant exchanges whose activities do not warrant the present high cost of maintenance. Among the cities mentioned where the plan may be put into effect are Butte, Montana; Sioux Falls, Portland, and New Haven.

It is the plan of these combined distributors to do away entirely with the exchanges and to establish the shipping stations to handle physical distribution for all companies, the costs to be pro-rated by all participating.

In arranging the details it is said the selling for New Haven, as well as the collections would be handled out of New York and Boston, and the actual shipments would be handled in New Haven. The other cities would be handled similarly. If the plan is put into effect and proves successful it will be extended to other cities.

Lasky Berates Authors

Declares Those Who Fail to Make Good Are Unjust Critics of Motion Picture Industry

IN a statement made at a meeting of the Paramount producing staff and seven new writers brought from New York to Hollywood to prepare stories for filmization, Jesse L. Lasky berates authors and playwriters who denounce the motion picture industry, as "ignorant and childish." He says that such disgruntled authors who have not made good are only exploiting their own lack of understanding and ability.

In his statement to the staff, Mr. Lasky said:

"There have been many cases where a successful playwright or novelist has tried his talents in pictures and has failed and then returned to New York to flay the industry. The motion picture business is unlike the stage in that we of the motion pictures cater to the masses and not to a certain few, not to the so-called intelligentia. We, therefore, must have screen stories that will appeal to shop girls, the merchant or the banker, and not to the reader of Freud or the man or woman with Bohemian ideas.

"Those authors have tried in vain to please us, submitting stories that are impossible for filming, stories that would bring the wrath of the censors down upon us, stories that would shock the morals of the world craving entertainment. They fail and go back home and tell the world how mismanaged the industry is, in their narrow minds."

At the same meeting, Owen Davis, noted American playwright, denounced "sophisticated" writers and novelists, saying:

"Sophistication does not and never did exist commercially. Novelists and some playwrights suddenly overplayed it. Sophistication has no real meaning, for the final analysis of the generally successful play is simplicity. The day of mob confusion and spectacle is ended in pictures. In fewer characters and simplicity of theme is the strength of the motion picture plot. It takes a craftsman to weave simplicity into a screen play and make it mass entertainment."

The seven new authors who sat in at the conference are, Willard Keefe, author of "Celebrity;" Lester Cohan, who wrote "Sweepings" and "The Great Bear"; Samuel Ornitz, author of "Haunch, Paunch and Jowl" and "A Yankee Passional"; Harlan Thomson, whose successes are "Little Jesse James," "Merry, Merry," "Twinkle, Twinkle" and "My Girl"; Ernest Culbertson, author of "Goat Alley"; L. W. McLaren, former columnist of the New York American, and Wells Root, late of the New York World.

Town Refuses Permit to Operate Theatre

COURT action is expected to follow the action of the Selectmen of Milton in turning down a permit to occupy a theatre for motion pictures in Milton, Mass., a town which has steadfastly refused to license a motion picture theatre.

Court action, it is understood, will be based on the fact that a building permit for a building of a theatre was issued by the building commissioner of the town, J. H. Burt, on Sept. 20, 1927. The building was then erected with the purpose of seating about 800 people and has cost approximately $70,000.

The permit for the building was issued to H. L. Brown and the Markell Amusement Co.

Selectmen claim that the building department of the town functions under a state law independently of the selectmen.

Enlarge "Ideas" Circuit

More Elaborate Fanchon & Marco Shows Staged for Route Uutimately to Reach Atlantic Coast

FANCHON and Marco, producers of "Ideas," the stage presentations now circuited to the de luxe houses in the West Coast Theatres chain, have completed the first of a more elaborate style of show designed for the enlarged circuit over which they will be traveled. The "Ideas" will cross the Rockies into Denver soon, and ultimately will be sent from the West Coast, the producing center, to the Atlantic, according to plans developed since the acquisition of an interest in West Coast by William Fox.

Fanchon and Marco for years have had the ambition to produce for a coast-to-coast theatre circuit and negotiations were made several times in the past to develop a cross-country route for these stage presentations from the Los Angeles studios established by the producing team.

In affiliation with West Coast, Fanchon and Marco have built up a large wardrobe plant, known as the Fanchon and Marco Costume company, and have developed a mammoth scenic studio at the old Charles Chaplin film headquarters in Lincoln Heights.

Since the expanded program calls for a greatly enlarged aggregation of stars, the producers have launched a talent quest all over the Pacific Coast. Several "name" acts well known in vaudeville and musical comedy in both the East and the West have been signed to appear as principals in "Ideas" to be produced in the near future. Also a "talent hunt" conducted in West Coast theatres is now being carried on to select a local performer from each town for a part in a special revue.

The first of the new revues will open at the Loew's State theatre, Los Angeles, March 23. This will be followed by the presentation starring the girls selected at the West Coast contests in various cities included in the circuit.

While the Fanchon and Marco presentations continue to advance toward the Atlantic, the Publix unit shows extend further west. The Publix houses in Seattle and Portland, operated by West Coast Theatres recently opened, are offering the Murray-Anderson, Jack Partington and other Publix stage presentations produced in New York and given their first public showing at the Paramount theatre.

Plays Bag Pipes for Elephant in "Annie Laurie" Stunt

A BAG PIPE played close to an elephant's ear was one of the many stunts used by Manager Grant Pemberton of the Pantages Theatre, Salt Lake City, Utah, to put over the Lillian Gish starring picture "Annie Laurie." He was assisted by a Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer exploiteer.

Manager Pemberton consented to don Scotch kilts and make a trip to Liberty Park Zoo, where he produced bag-pipes and played "Annie Laurie" to Alice the Elephant.

Advance newspaper stories announced the event, explaining that Pemberton's performance would be in the nature of a scientific experiment to determine what reaction Scotch music would have upon animals. An invitation was extended to the Salt Lake populace to be present during the exhibition. The stunt gained a two-column-cut in the Telegram, together with publicity.

An Electrola, borrowed from the local Victor distributor, was placed in the theatre office for the run of the picture. A loud speaker, concealed behind a one-sheet cut-out of Lillian Gish and situated in front of the box-office, gave forth Scotch tunes as sung by Harry Lauder. The "Annie Laurie" record was used frequently also.

Station KSL broadcast "Annie Laurie" several times during the day and followed with reference to the engagement of the picture.

Rev. Goshen, Congregational minister who uses the Pantages Theatre, for his Sunday morning services, endorsed "Annie Laurie" from his pulpit.

Newspaper Runs "Cat and Canary" Photo Contest

A three-cornered tieup participated in by the Marion Star, the Grand Theatre and a local jewelry shop, was the feature of an effective exploitation campaign for the showing of "The Cat and the Canary" in Marion, Ohio. The stunt pivoted about a contest for amateur photographers, with a watch, donated by the jewelry shop as first prize, and theatre passes as other awards for pictures of cats and canary birds. The campaign was conducted by Manager Ed Sharpless, of the Grand Theatre, and A. J. Sharick, Universal exploiteer.

Whiteman Feature of Stage Show for Paramount

Paul Whiteman and his orchestra will be the stage feature at the Paramount theatre, New York, on the program opening March 31. The engagement will extend for about four weeks, with a new show each week.

Showmanship

Briefs

A "LEAP YEAR" wedding held on the stage of the Fond du Lac theatre, Fond du Lac, Wisconsin, created a stir of interest which directed local attention to that house recently. The principals were a young couple employed in a local store, and the idea of having their wedding "staged" was promoted by Manager Louis Lutz of the Fond de Lac theatre. Lutz followed up a leap year article in the newspaper by interesting merchants in giving presents to a couple agreeable to be married on the stage. The ceremony was held at 9:30 P. M. in order to permit the presence at the theatre of the couple's fellow workers in the store. From 7:30 on up to closing time there was a huge crowd in front of the theatre, awaiting entrance to see the show and the wedding. Lutz prevailed upon the newlyweds to appear on the stage at the last show (10:30) so as not to disappoint the scores of people who could not get into the house to see the ceremony performed.

CORINNE GRIFFITH'S bridal dress, worn in her new picture "The Garden of Eden," was the feature of a window display at the Arnold, Constable & Co., store, Fifth Ave., New York, for a week in advance of the opening of the film at the Paramount, where it is the current screen attraction. The setting for the display was designed by Edward S. Arkow, director of window displays at the store.

IN these horseless carriage days, nothing seems more conspicuous than a horse-drawn carriage, and Manager E. L. Merkley of the Strand theatre in Grand Rapids attracted notice to his showing of "Thanks for the Buggy Ride" with a ballyhoo which consisted merely of an old buggy hitched up behind a real "old dobbin." The passengers were a couple gotten up in old-fashioned dress and flaunting a banner carrying the title of the picture and theatre's name.

JIM LOUGHBOROUGH of the Metropolitan Theatre, Los Angeles, playing "Tillie's Punctured Romance" and Hilarity Week, pulled a nifty in the Los Angeles traffic when he had a "stilt man" in circus makeup, bannered with the attraction and Hilarity Week working in the congested traffic on the downtown streets. When the man on stilts, who barely cleared the electric light wires, clogged up traffic, the police were called and the giant stunt man was arrested. When the patrol wagon came to make the pickup, the stilt man was too long to haul down to the station in the wagon, so they put him on the roof of the police patrol and carried him through the streets to headquarters.

A RADIO advertising scheme for movie theatres of Baltimore has been arranged by station WCBM at the Chateau Hotel. Each night a list of theatres, with their attractions and addresses, is read over at the station. One dollar a day is charged each theatre for this service.

MANAGER GRIFF. GRANGER, of the Kaypee theatre, Mt. Gilead, Ohio, believes in keeping his house dark on Sunday. However, in order to accommodate some of the local "night owls" Granger opened his house at two minutes past midnight on Monday morning for the first showing of "Baby Mine."

Manager Wins Cooperation of Parents and Teachers

William M. Hartford, manager of Universal's Portola Theatre, Seattle, Washington, has been unannimously elected chairman of the Motion Picture Committee of the Parent Teachers Association of Seattle. He is now going over lists of bookings with the association for all Friday and Saturday shows. The principals of all schools in the district of his theatre will be given a list of these selected films which will also be announced regularly from the teachers' desks.

The Portola will present a free ticket to these shows to the school boys or girls who make the best marks each week in each grade.

Dusky Beauties in Contest at Canadian Theatre

The Colored Ladies Bathing Beauty Contest at the Griffin Theatre, St. Catharines, Ontario, staged by Manager George Forhan and advertised as the first of its kind in any theatre, proved to be a big success. Not one detail of the contest caused any offence and the theatre was packed at every performance.

Women's organization of St. Catharines protested to the civic officials regarding the event but no action was taken and the incident only served to attract more attention.

Immediately after the feature was staged in St. Catharines, a similar colored girls contest was conducted at the Capitol Theatre, Welland, Ontario, with equal success. The manager of the Welland Capitol is Tom Forhan, a brother of J. G. Forhan of St. Catharines.

Danz Inaugurates All Night Policy at Seattle Embassy

Joe Danz, manager of the Embassy Theatre in Seattle, has announced a new and enlarged policy for his 1000-seat downtown house. The daily policy of first run films and stage revues at 15c and 25c remains the same, but Mr. Danz has put the house on an all-night basis. His beauty revue and orchestra features will go on for the final shows at midnight hereafter, and pictures follow until 7 o'clock the following morning. The house opens at 9 a. m. again.

Novelty Throwaways for "Feel My Pulse"

MANAGER E. R. ROGERS made up 3,000 novelty throwaways of a unique appearance to advertise Bebe Daniels in "Feel My Pulse" playing at the Tivoli Theatre, Chattanooga, Tenn.

These throwaways contained a stick of gum with the maker's label pasted on the center of card. Just above the gum was copy reading, "feel my pulse —and see if it isn't time to buy some more" and then appeared the wording on the gum label, "Clark's Sweetwood Extra Fine Gum" followed by, "and then see Bebe Daniels in Feel My Pulse—Tivoli.

Prizes Awarded Hole-In-One Golfers During Run of "Spring Fever"

ALL Los Angeles golfers were eligible for special prizes from the Metropolitan theatre in that city during the run of "Spring Fever." This stunt attracted widespread notice to the showing of the Haines starring vehicle in which golf is a feature of the action.

There were no conditions attached to the offer of the Metropolitan. A prize was offered to any member of any golf club in or around Los Angeles who could make a hole in one.

A twenty-five dollar merchandizing order was offered as a prize to any one who did this while "Spring Fever" was running at the Metropolitan Theatre. Not only was this contest widely exploited by the newspapers, but also the theatre had a by-line in reference to it in its ads on its one sheets. Spaulding's Sporting Goods store also cooperated on this contest by mentioning it in a card in the window display. No one made a hole in one during the run of the picture, and this also caused newspaper comment in a humorous follow-up story.

Fifteen Window Displays Used in Drive for "Her Wild Oat"

The windows used for the sign colors included drug stores, grocery stores, barber shops and restaurants.

Four window displays that had a week's advance showing also pepped things up for the picture. One of the windows was in a hardware store, while the other three were vacant stores. The vacant store windows carried inserts, 22 x 28's, 11 x 14's, stills and one sheets. The hardware store window presented a real miniature restaurant: An outlay of dishes featured the window display while the background was a cutout from the six-sheet showing Colleen Moore serving in a restaurant. Turnstill made a small counter and cut out the men figures that were in the six-sheet, placed the men on a stool and put real cigarettes in their mouths. Sugar bowls, napkins, dishes, silver, etc., were on the counter while a towel was draped over the arm of the Colleen Moore cutout.

Two special beaverboard signs were placed in the theatre on each side of the stage ten days in advance of play dates. These signs were 3 feet x 8 feet and were placed in the openings of the air shaft. Footlights were placed at the bottom of the signs and were lighted when the trailer was being thrown on the screen.

A 24-sheet was posted on a cloth frame and placed down town in a much-traveled section just opposite the Rialto on a newly constructed building.

Special cards were placed in all restaurants; all hotels carried a card in their lobbies of the one-sheet size; a bulletin was posted at the Girls' College announcing the coming of picture and window cards were tacked on a piece of lath and placed up and down the business section in the flag pole holes.

Realistic Chaplin in Cutout Does Wire Act in "Circus" Display

MANAGER J. H. McLOUGHLIN had Charlie Chaplin walking the wire over the marquee to enliven interest in ''The Circus,'' playing at the Franklin Theatre, Tampa, Fla.

This wire walking was made possible by using a cutout of Chaplin from the six-sheet and placing it on a wire directly above the marquee. Through a mechanical arrangement, the cutout figure of Chaplin with monkeys on his head and shoulders was made to move back and forth.

The wire walking stunt was used during the showing of picture, while a huge banner reading, ''Coming—Charlie Chaplin in 'The Circus'—entire week, starting Sunday, Feb. 26th,'' was hung over the marquee well in advance of play dates.

To create more interest in the picture, McLoughlin passed out 5,000 drawing charts in the schools. Although these were primarily for the school children, anybody could participate in the contest. That part of Chaplin showing his derby hat, familiar moustache and shoes were imprinted on the blanks, and contestants were required to sketch in his likeness—the twisted smile, the cutaway coat, the shapeless trousers—and, of course, the cane.

The theatre awarded $5.00 in gold to the person creating the best and funniest likeness of Chaplin, and $2.50 for the next best sketch. The next ten best Chaplin drawings won a pair of passes to see the picture.

Another stunt that fell a little flat insofar as numbers were concerned was the Chaplin impersonation contest in which all contestants dressed like Chaplin and imitated his antics. Only two boys entered the contest, and since both won prizes the Tampa Times had their pictures in the newspaper.

Key City Reports

New York City

THE public's annual debt to Uncle Sam in the way of income tax and the usual depression felt by theatres during the Lenten season made last week just a fair one among the Broadway houses with one or two exceptions. The anniversary program at the Roxy shot figures for the big playhouse up to a pleasingly high mark and the lines that formed at the Rialto to see the first showings of "The Legion of the Condemned" (Par.) gives evidence that the companion picture of "Wings" will prove to be exceedingly popular. Reports from cities outside this zone where this picture has already played further strengthens this prediction. Another highlight of the week-end was the advent of "The Noose" (F. N.) at the Strand, much favorable comment being heard.

Fox's "Dressed to Kill" was the feature used along with an elaborate presentation which brought the Roxy out of its previous week's slump. The title of the picture might also be used to describe the appearance of this theatre, which was dolled up on the outside like one of the Astor's pet ponies in honor of breaking all existing theatre attendance records for the period of a year.

Jannings' "The Last Command" (Par.) concluded a very profitable eight weeks' run at the Rialto and the Rivoli with the "Gaucho" (U. A.), at popular prices for the first time was exceedingly well received. The Paramount fell somewhat behind its regular mark with "The Secret Hour" (Par.). Miss Negri does not seem to have her former following in this city.

During their radio broadcast program last Sunday the Colony management announced that this house would go on a two-a-day policy beginning with the premier of "We Americans" (U) on March 28. This would seem to spike the rumors that Fox was to secure control of this theatre. At any rate the new policy will be another try at boosting trade at a house rated as a tough one to put over. "The Count of Ten" (U) gave this house just another of its rather mediocre showings last week. Universal will seek to follow "We Americans" with attractions strong enough to hold up at the new prices and it is possible that "Uncle Tom" will leave the Central to be one of the early attractions at the Colony. This would leave the Central's future somewhat in doubt. Several rumors are about—but why a conjecture until something definite breaks?

Not doing anything out of the ordinary when showing at the Astor at the picture top "The Enemy" (M-G-M) failed to create any great interest at the Capitol at regular scale during the off week and the Strand also dropped back with "The Heart of a Follies Girl" (F. N.), this picture not being enough to offset the depression along the street.

After a particularly lucrative four months' run at the Embassy "Love" (M-G-M) gives 'way this week to the Colman-Banky film special "Two Lovers" (U. A.). "Love" and "The Merry Widow" are probably the two best bets the Embassy ever had for real money. "Wings" (Par.) the daddy special along Broadway is still doing a nice trade at the Criterion 'though slightly feeling the off week and "Mother Machree" (Fox) did not inspire any too many tears last week for the same reason; however, the other Fox special, "Four Sons" did brisk business at the Gaiety, helped along with Movietone. Fox's "Sunrise" continues at the Times Square.

Too new specials are in town—Warners' has "Tenderloin" (W. B.) and while the Vitaphone accompaniment occasioned some guffaws from a sophisticated first night audience, the picture is said to be an excellent one and it's altogether safe to predict that any real defects in the "talkie" part will have the earnest attention of its producer. The long heralded "Trail of '98" (M-G-M) came into the Astor and let "The Crowd" out after very well doing doing its bit to keep this house on a paying basis until the arrival of the former. Comment on the "Trail" rates it as an excellent production in for a considerable run.

"Simba" did well enough at the Earl Carroll to stay for another week—despite the fact that some wise boys along the street predicted that this film would not stay around long. The Johnson animal picture has made an excellent run.

Chicago

BUSINESS continues spotty in Chicago, with the big de luxe houses having by far the better of it. "The Showdown" was the feature at the Chicago with "Havana" on the stage and Spitalny's timely musical feature, "Irish Rhapsody," included in the program, which pulled good business. McVickers' screen offering, "The Patent Leather Kid," played to satisfactory business, while at the Roosevelt, "Old Ironsides" went into its last week, attendance being normal. Paul Ash and his Gang, in "Northwest Mounted" and "The Secret Hour" on the screen, accounted for a fair week at the Oriental. United Artists continued the prosperous run of "The Circus."

On the south side the Tivoli had a strong bill with "The Last Command" as its screen feature and Benny Kreuger and his orchestra on the stage, and attendance was good, while the same screen feature proved a drawing card at the Uptown, where Frankie Masters and Ruth Etting, in person, were the headliners of the program.

The Marbro and Granada theatres featured "If I Were Single" and, combined with big stage shows, fair attendance was reported.

"Finders Keepers," with Roy Detrich and his band and other features, including Vitaphone, went well at the Avalon, while average business was the report from the Capitol, which showed "Les Miserables."

Birmingham

BUSINESS in Birmingham the past week was, generally speaking, below normal. "The Circus," considering the attraction, played to rather mediocre business at the Alabama. The Ritz was off, playing "Flying Romeos" and Keith vaudeville. Loew's Temple, with Lon Chaney's "The Big City," is reported to have had fair business. The Strand, with a split bill, "The Big Parade" first half, and "Stand and Deliver," with Rod LaRocque, had a rather poor first half week, and reasonably good last half. The Trianon, with Madge Bellamy in 'Fox's "Soft Living," had a very good week. The Galax, with "Jesse James, Jr.," and "The Trick of Hearts" made a little money. The neighborhood theatres reported fair business.

Minneapolis

NICE spring weather and some first-rate box office attractions helped to make the theatre business a bit better than average in Minneapolis this week. "Legion of the Condemned" came into the Strand and made a fine showing, holding over for a second week as a result of the big crowds it drew. This picture won favor with both public and critics. Doug Fairbanks in "The Gaucho" did a nice second week's business at the Garrick. Clara Bow, in "Red Hair," kept the box office staff busy, and though the picture wasn't so much, the star's name was still a magnet.

Pantages showed "Moon of Israel" and did a very fine business on it. This picture was benefited by a lot of special advertising, by an advance showing for ministers, newspaper men, etc., and by some good exploitation. Monte Blue, in "The Bush Leaguer," was a timely baseball picture at the Hennepin-Orpheum, while Jackie Coogan, in "The Bugle Call," brought many of his old admirers into the Seventh Street theatre. Chester Conklin and W. C. Fields, "Two Flaming Youths," showed to about the usual crowds at the Lyric. The Metropolitan, a legitimate house, devoted itself to "The Natural Law," a sex film, with half the week for women only and the other half for men.

The Lagoon and Loring, neighborhood houses, both showed "The Patent Leather Kid" among their pictures for the week, and found it was an unusually good drawing card.

The Rialto did a nice business with "The Circus," while the Loring and American showed such films as "The Gay Defender" and "West Point."

Buffalo

CLARA BOW, in "Red Hair," a picture that was ably exploited by the adept Charlie Taylor, and a Publix stage revue entitled, "Steps and Steppers," combined to draw audiences of sufficient size last week to Shea's Buffalo to warrant a broad smile on the face of Manager Vincent R. McFaul.

Business also was reported good by Shea's Hippodrome, where Pola Negri was featured on the screen in "The Secret Hour," and Frank Orth headlined a Keith-Albee vaudeville program. H. M. Addison, manager of the Great Lakes, found satisfaction in the large numbers of theatre-goers that flocked to see "Tillie's Punctured Romance," the modernized tale of the three-ring circus that appeared under the same title some 14 years ago. Marion Sunshine topped the vaudeville offering and was received enthusiastically in her offering, "Just a Chorus Girl."

Loew's State drew good crowds with a triple-barreled attraction, Pat Rooney heading the stage program, Lew Cody and Aileen Pringle starring in "Wickedness Preferred" on the screen, and Col. Charles A. Lindbergh's good will flight of 40,000 miles being shown as an educational feature. The Lafayette reported good business with Estelle Taylor starring in the cinema presentation, "Lady Raffles," and an Oriental act featuring the Honorable Wu and 15 Far East damsels as the headline act in "The 'Feast of Lanterns."

St. Louis

CHARLIE CHAPLIN did not do so well with "The Circus" at Loew's State theatre during the week ending on March 16th. Truly the comedy was not his best effort, but it was funny and the fact that it had been two years since he brought out a film should have meant something. But apparently it didn't.

However, we must not be too critical with Charlie and his Circus. Times are somewhat hard. There are many men and women out of work and others are working but part time. And, in addition, there is considerable sickness abroad. And we must not forget that this is the Lenten season.

"Tillie's Punctured Romance," aided and abetted by a fairly good stage show directed by Brooke Johns, the long-legged banjo strummer, had but an average week at the Missouri theatre at Grand boulevard and Lucas avenue.

Just across the street (Lucas avenue) "Old San Francisco," the Vitaphone feature, ran through a second big week and has been held over.

Down at Skouras Brothers Ambassador a time-work picture plot was again used. The title was "French Dressing." Ed Lowry and his stage show produced most of the business of the week.

The St. Louis theatre, at Grand and Delmar boulevard, had on its screen "A Blonde for a Night," in conjunction with Orpheum Circuit vaudeville. On the whole, everything considered, it could be considered a good week's business.

The Orpheum combination house downtown showed "The Tragedy of Youth" and had a fair week's play.

Atlanta

ATLANTA theatre box-offices enjoyed a very good business the past week.

The Capitol, with Marie Prevost in "The Rush Hour," boasts of a phenomenal record, but gives the larger portion of the credit to their vaudeville bill, Jimmie Hodges and his girls.

Loew's Grand, showing William Haines and Alice Day in "The Smart Set," had a good week. While next door the Howard, with "Old Ironsides," drew appreciable houses.

Keith's Georgia played "Tillie's Punctured Romance, featuring W. C. Fields and Chester Conklin, to average good audiences.

Down the street at Metropolitan "The Jazz Singer" held forth its fourth week's run to continued remarkable houses. This picture has set a new run record for Atlanta theatres. The New Alamo showed only one first run, "The Million Dollar Mystery," but business was unusually good. Three bills, "The Midnight Limited," "Pals in Peril" and "The Fall of the Alamo" brought the Tudor a successful week.

At the Rialto "The Magic Flame" played for the second time in Atlanta. Business did not reach a high peak with it.

Albany and Troy

THERE is no question but that the Lenten season affected business at the motion picture theatres in Albany during the past week. Despite the fact that excellent pictures were shown at the first run houses, business did not measure up to what would probably have been the case at some other time. The fact remains, however, that business generally this Lenten season is ahead of a year ago, and probably better than any year thus far in the history of the motion picture theatres in the city. It was only two or three years ago that the picture theatre managers here were inclined to use any old picture during the Lenten season, as they asserted that no matter what was shown business would not respond. This year there is a change of tune and some of the season's finest productions are sustaining business at a time when it would have been thought impossible a couple or three years ago.

At the Mark Strand, "Sadie Thompson" filled the theatre each night and had the crowds standing at the opening of the second show. There were a couple of good Vitaphone presentations during the fore part of the week, but during the last three days one of these was discontinued and in its place was substituted screen shots of an Albany girl who had won a recent beauty contest. This may have attracted business, but it was not satisfactory from the standpoint of the ordinary theatregoer, who would have much preferred listening to the Vitaphone than looking at the prize beauty buy a pair of shoes. The newsreel was also badly cut.

At the Leland theatre, "Wild Geese," coupled with "40,000 Miles with Lindbergh," played to such business that it was necessary each night to open the gallery. No doubt the Lindbergh picture attracted almost as much, or possibly more, than the feature itself. There was also an excellent newsreel in connection with the well-balanced program. Ordinary business was done at the Clinton Square theatre with "Powder My Back" and "All Aboard."

The Mark Ritz ran "The Heart of a Follies Girl" with just about ordinary business during the week, but fortunately had one of the best Stan Laurel comedies in some time.

The smaller houses, both downtown and neighborhood, report business as being just about average, although it is noted that the ten cent houses seem to be going over well just now in Albany.

In Troy, "The Dove," playing the week at the Troy theatre, did not do any great amount of business. The Lincoln split its week with "The Enemy" the fore part and "The Missing Link" the latter, both doing perhaps a trifle better than an average week's business, but with Lenten devotions making their inroads, this being particularly true at the early shows.

Dallas

DURING the past week Dallas has had a wide variety of weather. The first of the week was warm spring weather, then pouring rains, ending up with very cold days. Business at the theatres, however, was not greatly affected by the weather.

"The Patent Leather Kid," with Richard Barthelmess at the Melba, was the outstanding picture of the week, and did much to enhance the prestige of the theatre. With exception of two days, business was big for the ten-day run.

"Woman Wise," with June Collyer and William Russell, brought average business to the Majestic. El Brendel, noted stage and screen comedian, headed the vaudeville bill and was well received.

"The Legion of the Condemned," with Fay Wray and Gary Cooper, grossed heavily at the Palace, packing them every night. The picture was good and the public found it out.

At the Capitol, "Slightly Used," with May McAvoy and Conrad Nagel, and "Beware of Married Men," with Irene Rich and Stuart Holmes, brought only fair receipts for the week. Matinee business was about average, but night receipts were down.

"No Place to Go," with Mary Astor and Lloyd Hughes, proved to be only a fair drawing card at the Old Mill. "Body and Soul," with Aileen Pringle, Norman Kerry and Lionel Barrymore fared better and played to average crowds.

The Arcadia, with "Silk Legs," "What Price Glory," and "The Chinese Parrot" had a fair gross for the week. A Vitaphone presentation was included in each day's program.

Seattle

SHOW business of the city centered almost entirely in one spot last week—the occasion was the opening of the magnificent new 3,500-seat Publix theatre, known as the Seattle theatre, operated by West Coast for Publix and Loew jointly. The opening was very informal, but the week was a tremendous success, with the house itself taking the city by storm and the show dazzling local theatre patrons with its beauty. The opening program featured the Publix stage show, "Merry Widow Revue," with Bebe Daniels in "Feel My Pulse" taking the film premiere honors. The stage show was a tremendous success; the film was not very well liked. Other musical and film attractions combined to create a fine total program. Gross the opening six days is estimated at approximately $26,500. The weekly "nut" of this theatre is reported to be close to $20,000; said to be the highest operating expense of any theatre on the Pacific Coast.

Second honors came to the Fifth Avenue theatre, strongly bucking the Seattle with a Fanchon-Marco stage show featuring Kolb and Dill and a big company in a minature musical comedy, "In Algeria." These popular stage personalities kept the theatre well filled all week, and the film portion of the show, "The Latest from Paris," was well liked. An added attraction was the return of Ollie Wallace to the console of the Wurlitzer, after several seasons as a musical director and master of ceremonies. It was a distinct pleasure to see "Ollie" at the console once more. Gross for the week reached about $15,000; a very good week, everything considered.

At the Columbia theatre, Manager Bob Bender kept the house comfortably filled all week with the second week's engagement of "The Circus." The Chaplin film still has the town talking, and stood the customers out for several nights during the second week, despite other big attractions. Business was very good, and the film goes into a third week.

The Blue Mouse theatre, with Sid Chaplin in "The Fortune Hunter," did its usual strong business with the assistance of Vitaphone and Movietone. The picture was not the equal of former Chaplin films, either in box office value or audience appeal, but was good enough for a pleasing week. Gross was probably a bit lower than the average good week at this house, due to the previously-mentioned strong counter attractions.

The United Artists theatre did not fare so well. The attraction there was "The Last Command," in its second week, but the film was pulled off after a very bad week-end's business. The opening week was good, and it was the intention of the management to put on "The Gaucho" for the second week, but the hold-over was a result of the desire not to buck too strongly the Seattle opening. It was apparently a bad move, as "The Last Command" weakened and "The Gaucho" was rushed on almost cold in the middle of the week.

The vaudeville houses had a poor week. At the Orpheum, "Blue Danube" was fairly well liked, but attendance for the week was about 15 per cent below normal. This was blamed on the Seattle opening, but a new low price policy at the Orpheum, effective this week, is taken as an indication that general business has been poor. The Pantages theatre featured "Soft Living" and played to fair houses only.

"Sex Appeal," at Joe Danz's Embassy theatre attracted the usual good business and showed a pretty fair week's business, but the Liberty theatre is having tough sledding, and has reduced prices from 25c to 15c again.

Cleveland

CLEVELAND suffered from too much cake in its film fare last week. There were so many good pictures on the screen, and so many places to go to see them, that while all of the theatres report business was consistently good, none of them had any broken records to hold up for inspection.

"The Gaucho" kept up a standard of capacity all week at the Stillman. Adopted by the public as one of Fairbanks' best pictures, and supported as such, it is being held over, of course. "The Last Command," a picture to go into the Film Hall of Fame, piled up an enviable record for itself at the Allen theatre. While it opened to average business, it built up every day of the engagement by its own momentum. "The Show Down" not only filled Keith's Palace all last week, but had 'em standing up two and three rows deep for every performance. This picture was received with open arms by critics and public alike. "The Smart Set," the attraction at the State, was handed a medal for wisecracking in the form of continuous and hearty laughs from start to finish. Keith's East 105th St. had a better-than-average week with "The Main Event," a love tale surrounded by a prize fight setting, which, though light in plot, was well received. "Gun Gospel" brought all lovers of westerns to Reade's Hippodrome. And most everybody likes westerns. Which is another way of saying that the box office reports were eminently satisfactory, and Ken Maynard was treated to round after round of applause for his lariat throwing and riding exhibitions. The Cameo reported just average business with a second downtown run of "Sadie Thompson" as the feature attraction. The Park played a first-run neighborhood engagement of "The Big City" with marked box office success. "Fools of Passion," foreign made sex hygiene picture, continued to draw crowds at the Oriental, where it was in its third week.

Neighborhood houses are feeling the effects of Lent, and state that business was quiet.

Legitimate theatre competition was keen.

Boston

WITH the Automobile Show in full blast, Boston theatres have been cashing in as well as the automobile dealers, for the show has brought an unusually large number of out-of-town people to Boston for the week, resulting in heavy mid-Lenten business. Weather conditions for motor travel have been ideal with spring nearly a month ahead of former years, so that the suburbs have kept in much closer touch with Boston than in former years. The combination has been ideal for theatre business.

The sensation of the season for Boston films has been "The Jazz Singer," which has been shown simultaneously for four weeks, and will continue two more weeks, at the Modern and Beacon theatres, a total of six weeks at two first run theatres simultaneously. The previous long run at either of these theatres has been three weeks at one and two at the other.

Boston is without a road show for the first time in months, "Wings" having completed its run at the Tremont, where it has been succeeded by a season of musical comedy.

"Red Hair," at the Metropolitan, grossed well throughout the week. This theatre had a heavy patronage from the out-of-town element and every night during the week found a long line in front of the theatre waiting a chance to obtain seats. Gene Rodemich and his stage band, with a Murray Anderson production, occupied the stage.

Another theatre cashing in on the Auto Show crowds was Loew's State, which has been playing to heavy regular business all season. "The Latest from Paris" was the feature and with Van and Schenck as the stage attraction, provided a happy week from the box office standpoint.

"The Divine Woman," at Loew's Orpheum, was shown to capacity audiences several times during the week with a better than average full week credited to it. The Washington Street Olympia's showing of "Flying Romeos" has resulted in one of the best weeks of the entire season. At the Exeter, "The Patent Leather Kid" holds the screen and is a big drawing card in spite of its appearance at several other theatres in Boston recently. "The Gaucho," at the Bowdoin Square, and "The Garden of Allah," at the Lancaster, have been doing splendid business all week. "On to Reno," at the Keith-Albee Boston theatre, has played to one of the season's biggest weeks at this house.

Other films reporting a good week's return are "The Noose" at the Scollay Square Olympia, "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes," at the Fenway, and "The Patent Leather Kid" at the University.

In the suburban theatres, "The Student Prince," playing simultaneously at three theatres, "The Last Command" and "Learn and Love" at four theatres, "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes," "Sorrell and Son," "The Gaucho," and "Sporting Goods" at three theatres report good business.

Tampa

THE Tampa got back into first place last week with "Red Hair." The opening Sunday was "big," with the remaining three days of the run going over very good. There is no doubt about it, Clara Bow is the big draw with Tampa fans, and while the business on "Red Hair" did not come up to some of her former records, the business was very satisfactory. "Stand and Deliver" was featured the last half and it drew nicely. The house registered an excellent week.

The Victory had a big Sunday with "The Desired Woman" and other Vitaphone presentations. The gross for the week was a little under that of last week, but the decrease was so slight it did not indicate any wane of the popularity of the Vitaphone entertainment.

The Strand also opened the week with big business. "Sharp-Shooters" was the attraction and this picture proved a real draw for the two days it was used. "The Latest from Paris" did nicely for three days. "The Princess from Hoboken" was used the last two days in place of "Their Hour," which had been advertised, and it drew average.

The Franklin, after a two weeks' splurge with big pictures a full week at 50c prices, went back to the regulation programs at their 30c price. "Straight Shooting," "The Four-Flusher" and "The Branded Sombrero" were the pictures featured and all drew just about the average business.

Kansas City

ATTENDANCE figures, much to the relief of virtually all managers of first run houses in Kansas City, took a jump upward last week. Weather conditions were springlike, which may or may not have had something to do with it. Exploitation and newspaper advertising remained at about the same par which it has for the last two months, but the line-up of pictures was strong.

"The Enemy," at Loew's Midland, played to greatly increased crowds all week, which also can be said of "The Noose" at the Mainstreet. "Woman Wise" brought an attendance to the Pantages theatre which was better than it had been for several weeks. "Lady Raffles," at the Liberty, played to a good week's attendance, as did "Something Always Happens," at the Newman theatre.

Philadlephia

DURING the past week box office receipts in the downtown theatres were excellent, with mild spring like weather and some exceptionally good attractions as the chief attendance factors.

The Stanley, with Gilda Gray in person in an elaborate stage presentation and also on the screen in her new picture, "The Devil Dancer," played to fine business all week

The Fox, with "A Girl in Every Port" on the screen and George Jessel in person as the principal drawing card on the stage, had little cause for complaint. Adler, Weil and Herman, the California Humming Birds, and the Fox Studio Choral Ensemble of 25 voices, with Lillian Buckman, soprano, helped round out the bill.

The Carman, with the feature play, "Woman Wise," and Neville Fleeson and Bobbie Folsom in a musical offering, "The Song Painter," reports normal business.

"The Circus," with Charlie Chaplin at his best, in its third week, has been providing laughter at the Karlton and box office receipts prove that this is what the public wants.

"Wings," at the Aldine, has passed its 175th performance and is still attracting the crowds.

"Wild Geese," an exceptional picture and one that is much talked about, has proved a success at the Victoria.

"Four Sons," in its second week at the Fox-Locust, is holding up well.

The Arcadia, with "Doomsday," had a fair week, and the Stanton, with "Ben Hur," reports satisfactory business.

The Palace, with Gloria Swanson in "Sadie Thompson," and the Capitol, with "Sorrell and Son," drew good patronage.

The remarkable popularity of Al Jolson in "The Jazz Singer," with Vitaphone accompaniment, was strikingly demonstrated by the fact that he was seen in that production at ten different neighborhood houses in various sections of the city. For this showing it was necessary to install special Vitaphone equipment at each theatre, involving considerable expense, but in nearly every instance the outlay was justified by the large audiences attracted.

Salt Lake City

THE Salt Lake downtown theatre business proved to be highly gratifying as a general rule this past week. Several of the houses report business to have been extraordinarily good.

The Capitol theatre played to crowded houses throughout the week's run of Bebe Daniels in the comedy, "Feel My Pulse," and also the stage presentation, "Lace Idea," a Fanchon and Marco production. Some specially arranged community singing arranged by Alexander Schreiner, organist here, also proved to be very popular.

The Paramount Empress theatre did unusually well with their showing of "The Legion of the Condemned," with Gary Cooper and Fay Wray.

A split week was arranged at the Victory theatre with "Ladies Must Dress" and "The High School Hero" being presented with satisfactory results.

The American theatre management reports fairly crowded houses during the week's run of Syd Chaplin and Helene Costello in "The Fortune Hunter."

Alice Day in "Night Life" at the Gem brought in moderately good returns.

The picture offering at the Pantages theatre was "Baby Mine," which is said to have gone over exceptionally well, in conjunction with the six vaudeville acts of the bill.

The second showing here of Mary Pickford in "My Best Girl" filled the Rialto theatre throughout a several days' engagement. Wm. Boyd in "Dress Parade" drew many to the neighborhood Mission theatre.

Harrisburg, Pa.

STRONG attractions in the downtown first run houses brought satisfactory financial returns to the managers. Receipts were spurred also by the fact that there is some improvement in the local industrial situation. "The Private Life of Helen of Troy," which showed all week at the Colonial, won favor from the start and continued to be well patronized all week. At Loew's Regent the feature film was King Vidor's "The Crowd," which had a strong appeal and a type of heart interest that went big in Harrisburg.

At the Victoria, "The Showdown," starring George Bancroft and Evelyn Brent, started the week with a "Sunday midnight" show—actually beginning at 12.01 a.m. Monday. It drew a big crowd, which was typical of the attendance record all week. Manager Lee Levy tried the midnight performance as an experiment, and has not yet announced whether it will be a part of the permanent policy of the theatre. In the case of the Bancroft film, it served to increase the week's receipts materially. The Victoria, since the recent installation of a new Marr & Colton organ, has introduced a tenor soloist who sings illustrated songs at all performances.

The main film attraction at the State theatre the last three days of the week was Madge Bellamy in "Soft Living," which contributed to swelling materially to the box office receipts. "Tom Tyler and His Pals," in "Splitting the Breeze," provided a very snappy brand of Western thriller for the patrons of the Broad street theatre, while Buster Keaton in "College" packed 'em in at the National on Friday and Saturday. "White Black Sheep," with Richard Barthelmess, was at the Grand for its second run in Harrisburg, and the Capitol offered a return of "Tin Hats," with Conrad Nagle and Claire Windsor. "Straight Shooting," at the Royal, appealed especially to men and boys.

Baltimore

WITH the exception of the Stanley theatre, where Clara Bow, in "Red Hair," proved a strong pulling attraction, with a stage presentation, business in this city continued to be only about fair at the first run houses for the week beginning Monday, March 12. Of course, the slump is attributed mainly to the Lenten season.

"Gentlemen Prefer Blondes," with Ruth Taylor, did not appeal so well to the public at Loew's Century, although there was a good stage attraction on the bill also and a Blonde Brunette popularity contest was conducted by Junior McGeehan, the publicist. Business was only about fair for that house, while upstairs, at the Loew's Valencia, in the same building, Charlie Chaplin, in "The Circus," continued as the attraction for its second week and only proved a fair puller, but it must be noted that ten shows were being given each day.

"The Wise Wife," starring Phyllis Haver, with Tom Moore, with five acts of Keith-Albee family time vaudeville, proved a good business getter at Keith's Hippodrome, and business at the New Garden, with "Figures Don't Lie," starring Esther Ralston, with eight acts of Keith-Albee high class vaudeville, and Gus Edwards as the feature, proved a pretty good business puller there.

"A Girl in Every Port," starring Victor McLaglen, with Robert Armstrong, was liked thoroughly by the public and went over fairly well at Whitehurst's New theatre.

"Flying Luck" at the Palace, with burlesque on the same bill, operating on a grind policy, had fair business, while "My Lady of Whims," starring Clara Bow, with a stage presentation act, proved a pretty good drawer of patrons at the Rivoli afternoons and nights.

Rin-Tin-Tin was seen again at Warners' Metropolitan in "A Dog of the Regiment," with Vitaphone attractions on the same bill, and this went over very good throughout the week. People, particularly children, turned out very strong to see Rinty again.

Ottawa

THE talk of the week in Ottawa, Ontario, centered around Charlie Chaplin and his picture, "The Circus," which was a big hit at the Regent theatre. Manager Ray Tubman estimated that 500 people were turned away at the first performance of the engagement and they kept coming in droves throughout the week. The comedy was of the very satisfying kind and everybody was glad to see Chaplin again.

Nearly everybody also wanted to see "Let 'er Go, Gallegher" at B. F. Keith's theatre, and this thriller proved to be a sensation. It topped a highly successful "Irish Week" arranged by Manager J. M. Franklin in commemoration of St. Patrick's Day.

"Sharp Shooters" registered very fair business at the Centre theatre and it added considerable variety to the usual run of features at this house.

The Fern theatre was one of the busiest spots in town with "Drums of the Desert," with which was shown a chapter of "On Guard." Although the Fern is a neighborhood house, it drew patrons from all parts of the city with the Zane Grey story. The Rex did very well with "A Regular Scout," and the final chapter of "Whispering Smith." The latter proved a real drawing card. "Feel My Pulse," starring Bebe Daniels, failed to draw at the Imperial theatre. It was poor in comparison with "West Point," which played the Imperial during the previous week. The second run of Lon Chaney's "The Unknown," at the Columbia theatre, was a distinct success, as was Lon Chaney's "London After Midnight," at the Laurier theatre, in Hull, Quebec.

The strongest double-bill at the Capitol theatre, Hull, in a long time was "A Million Bid," with Dolores Costello, and "Ladies Must Dress," with Madge Bellamy. "The Woman Who Did Not Care" registered a little better than average business at the Eden theatre, Hull.

Pittsburgh

WEATHER, up to Friday, was fine, but on Friday a blizzard came forth with business doing the opposite, although it picked up again Saturday to normal. The Stanley, playing Emil Jannings in "The Last Command," and Sophie Tucker on the stage, did very well. The Aldine theatre, with Jack Holt in "The Tigress," and vaudeville, did a disappointing gross considering the popularity of Holt in this city. Douglas Fairbanks, as "The Gaucho," which was at the Penn, did a normal business, but considering the star and the picture, which also included a great stage show, things could have been a little better, but there was no need for gray hair. Grand picked a winner with "Legion of the Condemned" and many favorable comments on the picture were heard in town.

An unusual incident occurred at the Davis, "Peaks of Destiny" was booked and was taken out Monday afternoon, replaced by Pola Negri in "The Secret Hour," both pictures being Paramount, and the Cameo booked "Johnnie, Get Your Hair Cut," a Jackie Coogan picture two years old that never had a first run in Pittsburgh until now. Business was so poor that Monday afternoon a Fox revival, "St. Elmo," was added, making a double feature bill, and business picking up, although still off for this house, which does a consistently good business week in and out. This is the first time a double feature has been run downtown in a theatre in over two years, when the State tried the idea unsuccessfully.

Salt Lake City

AN unusually good downtown theatre business was enjoyed here last week, with several special picture productions having been shown.

Clara Bow in "Red Hair" did a tremendous business at the Capitol theatre, in conjunction with the Fanchon and Marco stage presentation "Folliettes."

"The Legion of the Condemned" was held over at the Paramount Empress theatre for a few days longer than the original week's booking due to its great popularity and the capacity houses drawn. Norma Talmadge, in her first United Artists production, "The Dove." is now being shown at the Paramount Empress with very satisfactory results. A stage presentation is also offered.

John Gilbert in "Cameo Kirby" and also "Fourty Thousand Miles with Lindbergh" are playing to crowded houses at each performance at the Pantages theatre, it is reported, in connection with the vaudeville bill shown at this house.

All house records at the Gem theatre since the opening thirteen years ago have been broken during the showing of "Chicago" there, according to Manager W. E. Shipley. Crowds have been turned away every night.

Wallace Beery and Raymond Hatton in "Partners in Crime" did satisfactorily at the Victoria theatre in connection with a series of "The Collegians," featuring a Salt Lake star, Dorothy Gulliver. The American theatre had fairly good results from the week's run of "Across the Atlantic," featuring Monte Blue.

"The Gorilla," with Charlie Murray and Fred Kelsey, drew the average good house to the Rialto theatre as a second run.

Milwaukee

MANAGERS in Milwaukee's down town theatres report a very good week, one of the best in the past month. Weather was ideal for good business and attractions at practically all houses were strong. "Red Hair" filled the Wisconsin to a satisfying extent at all the evening performances. Charles Chaplin in "The Circus," playing its second week at the Alhambra, was not as popular as it was in its first week, but nevertheless drew good houses. Matinee business was not quite up to what was expected. "The 13th Hour" and "40,000 Miles with Lindbergh" combined to make a very popuular bill at the Merrill. "Old Ironsides" was held over at the Strand for a second week, and business here was fair. "Chicago" at the Garden is playing to unusually good houses.

Business continued to be good in the outlying theatres. "Men of Mystery," so called, and "Mental Marvels" are reaping a harvest in Milwaukee theatres just now. Three or four of these acts are being advertised in a large number of neighborhood houses and are attracting good business. "The Student Prince" is playing to good houses at the Uptown and Tower theatres. The Venetian is celebrating Anniversary Week with "Beau Sabreur" as the feature and has enjoyed very good patronage.

Des Moines

AT the Des Moines theatre last week the feature was "Old Ironsides," which did not prove a record picture in any way, doing just the ordinary run of business. Comment was favorable. At the Capitol theatre the attraction was "Wife Savers," which did not do so very well. The stage show, "Red Hot Capers," did not compare with some which had preceded it and the very pretty weather outside also probably had something to do with the fact that the crowds did not come inside the theatre.

At the Strand theatre, "The Loves of Carmen" did a very good business and a reissue of "St. Elmo" met with favor.

Opinions on Pictures

Legion of the Condemned

Good War Story—Thrills and Everything

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THERE can be no complaints about the screen being surfeited with war stories just as long as they stack up as good as this one. The new opus can safely be compared to "Wings" in its collection of thrills. In fact it can safely be catalogued that it has a fine lot of good action material set off with much pictorial beauty. With all of the war pictures ahead of it there wouldn't be much argument if it was accepted as the hottest war film of them all.

The idea projects a group of young men who have lived adventurous lives in various corners of the world—and who are determined to die with their boots on when they reach Flanders fields. Of course being up the same alley as "Wings" it exploits airplane activities. The scenes in the ether are the high spots of the picture. Yet its story doesn't suffer a bit. It is shot full of suspense and a creditable line of romance, and builds to a climax which carries a fine thrill. William Wellman, who handled "Wings," was the boss here and succeeds in getting everything out of the story and out of his players.

Drawing Power: Should draw on good advertising campaign—which it deserves. Okay for high class houses and those not catering to first runs. Exploitation Angles: Tease the title. Tie up with American Legion posts. Play up the aviation angle—which is exceptionally popular now.

THEME: Drama of the war with emphasis placed upon the air service.

Produced and distributed by Paramount. Length, eight reels. Released, March, 1928. The Cast: Barry Norton, Gary Cooper, Lane Chandler, Fay Wray. Director, William Wellman.

The Masked Angel

A Good Story, Well Done

(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

BETTY COMPSON has seldom been seen to better advantage than in this picture which was adapted from a Red Book story titled, "Remorse," by Evelyn Campbell. It is one of those faith cure romances in which Miss Compson is first seen as a wild cabaret hostess and then as the guiding angel whose devotion and love bring back to normalcy an apparently broken and temporarily blinded soldier.

It is a story that would have to be well done to be impressive and it is to the credit of Miss Compson and her director, Frank O'Connor, that it proceeds on its conservative way to a very happy conclusion. There are no desperate attempts to crowd it with pathos nor to exaggerate the romantic scenes. It all proceeds quite naturally and Miss Compson is equally good as the cabaret gold-digger and the sympathetic nurse, who guides her lover back to health.

The performance is rather lavishly staged and the scenes are accurately enacted. While some parts of it might seem a bit illogical there seems a sincerity about the playing of the different roles that makes it ring unusually true. It is as good a piece of directing as this observer has seen for some time. Every role is in capable hands and competently acted. The story is an impressive one with a number of quips and turns that hold the interest throughout and no silly attempt was made to relieve the tensity of the action by the injection of impossible comedy that usually characterizes stories of the type.

Drawing Power: It is an attraction that should hold the attention of an audience in almost any house where a well made picture is appreciated. Exploitation Angles: The star's name offers good exploitation, as well as the faith cure angles. There are a number of different twists to the picture that will readily suggest exploitation as outlined in the press book.

THEME: Cabaret girl accused unjustly of theft seeks refuge in a hospital and pretends she has come to call on the blinded and broken young soldier. He becomes interested in her and through her efforts is encouraged back to normalcy, after which they are wed.

Produced and distributed by First Division Pictures. Length, 5,700 feet. March release. The Cast: Betty Compson, Erick Arnold, Wheeler Oakman, Jocelyn Lee, Grace Cunard, Lincoln Plumer, Robert Homans, Jane Keckley. Director, Frank O'Connor. Adapted by Maxine Alton.

The Trail of '98

Vivid and Interesting—Finely Directed

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

STORIES of the gold stampede up Dawson way have been filmed before but never on the scale as depicted here. And because they have been recorded in celluloid any tale of the Klondike naturally hasn't much quality of surprise in its action. However, Clarence Brown has done a very neat job. It is a director's picture and is more adaptable for audiences which run to the masculine sex.

Brown shows up the cruelties of Nature, the terrific obstacles that these adventurers had to overcome to wrest the yellow metal from the earth. He doesn't spare the camera nor his company in collecting a most realistic account of the gold rush.

The picture is rather long and could be cut judiciously without destroying any of its compelling points. The romantic issue is valueless in emphasizing the quality of the theme. The big romance is the struggle to get there and see it through. The director has caught most of this theme. Had the characters been more realistic in presenting their own difficulties it would have been quite perfect. But why cavil over such minor points as Ralph Forbes disregarding the freezing weather in appearing in a tent as if clad for an autumn's fishing trip? There are so many fine things about it. The comedy relief by Karl Dane, the "Fantomscreen," giving breadth to the snowslide, and the rapids-shooting scene, are some of these high marks. It is well acted by Forbes, George Cooper, Tully Marshall and Harry Carey. Dolores del Rio is excellent enough though she's hardly the Klondike type. It is magnificently staged and is scenically a masterpiece.

Drawing Power: Title and director and cast. Exploitation Angles: Play up the Klondike rush. Bill as big melodrama of the gold rush. Play up scenic points, cast, etc.

THEME: Melodrama of the gold rush to the Klondike in '98.

Produced and distributed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Length, eleven reels. Released, March, 1928. The Cast: Dolores del Rio, Ralph Forbes, Harry Carey, Tully Marshall, Karl Dane, Martha Mattox, Caesar Gravina. Director, Clarence Brown.

Czar Ivan the Terrible

A Russian Photoplay

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

PRODUCED by Sovkino of Moscow, this production concerning the famous Czar Ivan will probably create a furore where Russians congregate, but as to audiences not of Slavic extraction it is quite another thing. There are some who like caviar, you know, and others who abhor it. Like most foreign-made films, this fantastic story, laid in the times of medieval Russia, will need exploitation (lots of it) to create a lure for it at the box office.

Surnamed "Wings of a Serf," the story has to do with the brief existence enjoyed by a serf with ambitions to fly, the fall of a rich Bojar who incurred the dislike of Ivan, the affaires de amour of the Czarina and various other sundry happenings around the court of the terrible czar. There's an awful lot of detail crowded in to the film throughout which the realistic touch of the Russians is discernible. The censors have evidently lopped freely here and there. Still, the Russians' realism lingers. One brief scene shows a body impaled on a collection of spears.

You won't find many clean shaven features, Barrymore profiles and the like among the men—they're mostly bewhiskered gentry. The love element, which carries such a strong appeal to women fans, is lacking. It's a wild, barbaric melodrama.

Drawing Power: For the double feature program. Only where there are Russians or Slavs will it have strong appeal by itself. Exploitation Angles: Ivan made his mark in history, a fact you can bring out. Mention it as a cinematic effort of the Soviet. Feature Russian music. Ballyhoo Leonidoff as one of Moscow players.

Produced in Russia by Sovkino. Distributed here by Amkino (S. R.). To be released in about a month's time. Length, 8,500 feet. The Cast: L. M. Leonidoff, M. Arkanoff, V. Makaroff, S. Garrel, I. Klukvin, M. Katchaloff, N. Prozorovsky, N. Vitovtov, Safnat Askardva. Director, Juri Taritch.

The Arizona Wildcat

Tom Mix in a Dashing Western

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

TOM MIX rides to glory and the haven of Dorothy Sebastian's arms in this typically Mexican vehicle through which lengthy streaks of rabid action pierce the story and give it a powerful kick. The story is pretty slight. It has to do with a cowboy who raises polo ponies and who is quite a crackerjack at swinging a mallet himself. He gets planted in the midst of villainy, some slick Easterners thinking they can put him out of the way while the big polo game in Santa Barbara is in progress. But, by calling on brawn and the faithful Tony, he escapes the well laid plan to remove him from the scene and jauntily arrives in the nick of time, sweeping his opponents before him.

Yes, it has lots of action for Tom and his horse even though it is a pretty flimsy tale. The polo game is well worth watching as are also the scenes on the ranch when they are breaking in polo ponies. All in all, it is a good western with action, comedy, a virile performance from the star and good looks and simperings from Dorothy Sebastian.

It should satisfy.

Drawing Power: Okay for the western clientele. It has the punch, which fact the fans will take cognizance of. Exploitation Angles: Have a polo outfit on display in your lobby. Use tie-up with sporting goods store. Feature plenty of stills of Mix and Tony.

THEME: Western action drama. Westerner meets the girl of his boyhood days and discovers that she is the prospective victim of a pair of fleecers. When her brother's polo team is on the verge of defeat through the playing of one of the crooks, the boy breaks through a plot to have him put out of the way and arrives on the scene just in time to win the game and save the girl from the crooks.

Produced and distributed by Fox Films. Released, November, 1927. Length, 4,665 feet. The Cast: Tom Mix, Dorothy Sebastian, Monty Collins, Ben Bard, Marcella Daly, Gordon Elliot, Cissy Fitzgerald, Doris Dawson. Story by Adela Rogers St. Johns. Scenario by John Stone. Director, William Neill.

Almost Human

A Novel Theme

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

HERE'S a story cast in a novel mold and presenting an unusual theme. Its human part deals with a young couple very much in love and its "almost human" part with the role played in bringing them together again by three dogs, the youngest of which tells the story. It is a simple idea, carried out simply and effectively; but many fans will find it boresome as it is not the sort of story provided for the police dog stars but one in which action is lacking to a large extent. There is humor, though, in the dogs' antics and some clever sentences have been put into their mouths which, coming from dogs, are decidedly humorous.

But it is quite dead in spots all the same. Several pleasing features about it are: the absence of the menace; the idea is a novel one which took courage to carry out; the story pretends to be just a simple little tale and nothing else. Vera Reynolds and Kenneth Thomson are okay as the young couple and Claire McDowell gives one of her fine performances as the aristocratic mother of the young husband, who cannot bear her new daughter-in-law. The dog performers are all good, better in fact than many of these police dogs who are rivaling the cowboy stars for stupendous feats and heroics.

Drawing Power: Not so good. Standing by itself it is not very strong, although the dogs bark vigorously. Will probably go best into neighborhood houses or houses which feature two features. Exploitation Angles: Concentrate on the leads and name of author.

THEME: Drama of two humans and their dogs. The couple becomes separated but the dogs bring them together again.

Produced by De Mille Studios. Distributed by Pathe. Released, December, 1928. Length, 5596 feet. The Cast: Vera Reynolds, Kenneth Thomson, Claire McDowell, Majel Coleman, Ethel Wales, Fred Walton. Dogs: Hank, Paul and Trixie. Adapted by Clara Beranger from Richard Harding Davis' "The Bar Sinister." Director, Frank Urson.

The Whip Woman

Not Any Too Strong

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

THIS production shapes up as average. In its acting and direction it has that note of mediocrity. Estelle Taylor has the role of a Hungarian girl who lashes the at everyone with her whip. Antonio Moreno is the futile hero, a nobleman who has gone to the dogs. Lowell Sherman and Hedda Hopper have, perhaps, the best thespian opportunities of the cast, Sherman as the flippant, polished baron and Miss Hopper as the proud, blue-blooded mother. On the whole, though, the group is uniform in that they are for the most part too passive and reserved.

The scene is a little Hungarian village. The girl is called the whip woman because she repulses the advances of all men attracted by her prettiness. She even knocks senseless the hero with the butt of her whip, but after she has nursed him back to health she comes to love him. The plot follows the usual trend when the hero thinks his girl has been untrue and has run off with the baron. They do not find out the truth until the girl has suffered much and the hero has again become dissolute.

Drawing Power: The names of the four featured players give it a better than fair pulling strength. Suitable for second run and average theatres. Exploitation Angles: Publicize the Hungarian atmosphere and feature the whip prominently. Play up the names.

THEME: Heart drama. Hungarian peasant girl succors a dissolute nobleman, who is about to commit suicide. He finds a new interest in life in the person of the girl. On their wedding day, the man's mother intervenes, with the result that the village baron, a friend of the mother, persuades the girl that the marriage would hurt her lover. They do not come together again until both have been miserable for some time, but they overlook caste and finally wed.

Produced by Robert Kane. Distributed by First National. Released, February, 1928. Length, 5,087 feet. The Cast: Estelle Taylor, Antonio Moreno, Lowell Sherman, Hedda Hopper, Julanne Johnston, Loretta Young. Story by Forrest Halsey and Leland Hayward. Director, Joseph C. Boyle.

The Battles of Coronel and Falkland Islands

An Excellent Picture

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

AMERICAN exhibitors entertaining the idea that English pictures are not for them will be surprised, we imagine, by this fine example of picture making. It is really a motion picture, the film having a throb and sweep as it marches steadily and forcefully along. It's all told by the camera, this story of how the British suffered a naval disaster during the late war and of how they came back with typical British bulldog tenacity and dealt their foes a death blow. A stirring record, one to stir the blood.

Created with the co-operation of the British Admiralty and Navy League, the realism of the newsreel only rivals the scenes of the naval struggles in which all the glamor of battle is vividly recorded. One portion, introduced by the title, "The Effort," pulsates with activity as it shows the British preparing to avenge the defeat of Coronel. They shape a ship before your eyes.

The scenes prior to battle are also stuffed full of excitement. The film, really, is educational to the man in the street, showing, as it does, the gunners taking the range, how the whole ship works like an efficient organization. It is a British picture and they have dealt courteously with their late enemies, as the latter are not portrayed in a wicked light. The camera work is excellent.

When all is said and done, it is an unusual picture. There's no love making in it and this fact may mitigate against its pulling power, as many women will find it empty in that respect, but it is crammed with action and men and boys will enjoy it to the full.

Drawing Power: Poor, as it is foreign made. Exploitation Angles: Promise them a good picture, a vivid account of naval battles. Tell them that 37 battleships were supplied for the production by the British Government and that thousands of men were loaned also. Tell them it is something out of the ordinary.

THEME: The naval clashes between the British and the Germans at Coronel and Falkland Islands during the World War.

Produced with the co-operation of the British Admiralty and Navy League. Distributed here by Artlee Pictures (S. R.). Director, Walter Summers.

"Ride 'Em, Ploughboy"

(Universal-Cartoon—One Reel)

FUN about a barn-yard is frustrated by the untimely arrival of a cyclone in which Oswald, at the moment, in the act of milking a cow, is hurled for miles and miles, but instinctively hangs on to the cow, which in the course of the journey is converted into a flying machine.

Walt Disney, the cartoonist, has injected a lot of fun into this one, the characters of which are the various denizens of the barn-yard.

Fortunately for Oswald he is in the act of milking the cow with the arrival of the cyclone, which flits about the barn-yard sucking every living thing into its vortex. It finally hits Oswald and the cow, with Oswald hanging on for dear life. They have a speedy journey, and are about to be plunged into oblivion when Oswald conceives the airplane idea and the cow carries him to a safe landing. There is a lot of good comedy in it.—CHESTER J. SMITH.

Adventures in Pygmy Land

All About the Little Men

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

A VERY good travelogue is this film record of Dr. Matthew W. Stirling's expedition into the land of the pygmies. Besides being interesting and different, it is educational. The jungle background, the strange life and simplicity of the dwarfed ebony-skinned folk, their amazement at the magic of the white men—all provide novelty not found in the usual Hollywood product.

Accompanying the expedition from its starting point to its camp in pygmy land the spectator watching this pictorial record of a most interesting adventure is placed right in the midst of the hustle and bustle of preparation, the painstaking navigation of unknown streams, the heartrending struggle through impeding jungle growth and the final reward the scientists sought—the pygmies. This venture into the unknown is vividly portrayed. With the scientists the spectator can, so to speak, place the childlike pygmy under the microscope and become fully acquainted with his superstitions, his humor, his wisdom, and his everyday life.

The film is much like a huge Ufa Oddities or a Fox Varieties. It has been ably edited, well titled and has many interesting highlights.

Drawing Power: Poor, when taken by itself. But if you link it with another film you can build up an interesting and widely diversified program. Exploitation Angles: Play it up as a jungle film and authentic record of life of little known pygmies. Stress fact film had backing of Smithsonian Institute and Dutch authorities.

THEME: An expedition into the pygmy country of Dutch New Guinea.

Produced by Dr. Matthew Stirling. Distributed by W. W. Hodkinson. Length, 6,800 feet. Cameraman, Richard K. Peck.

A Horseman of the Plains

One of the Best of the Mix Thrillers

(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

TOM MIX has made an exceptionally good picture in this, one of his last for Fox. It contains all of the usual Mix heroics and an abundance of suspense that will give a real thrill to those who appreciate this western type. There is an obstacle race, to which the mortgage on the girl's farm is appended, that will rouse even the most languid to a state of enthusiasm.

Tom is the sheriff of the adjoining town called in to round up a band of sharpers who are fleecing visitors at town fairs. On the way he saves the life of a colored man who becomes his inseparable companion, said colored man being Heine Conklin, who does some excellent work in the role. On the way Tom also attempts to save the life of Dawn O'Day (Sally Blane), his leading lady, for which he is promptly called down. Dawn is not in danger, but merely taking a wild ride on her favorite horse. She is the boss of the much mortgaged ranch and the daughter of an invalid father.

Tom's arrival is noted by the crooks, headed by Rutherford Gates, a leading citizen, who secretly holds the mortgages on the O'Day ranch. Gates has agreed to provide a driver for Miss O'Day in the big $10,000 sweepstakes. Tom decides that he will do the driving himself, but he is waylaid and made a prisoner by Gates' agents. He makes his escape just as the race is to start and arrives a moment late at the starting gate, but, lassoing the crook driver provided for Dawn by Gates, he takes the reins himself. And what a race that is. There has rarely been a better one staged in pictures. It includes footracing, horseback, automobile and hay trucks and every effort is made to wreck Tom on the course, but, of course, he is the eventual winner and the farm is saved.

Drawing Power: Should be immensely pleasing to the Mix fans and to others who are not his fans. Exploitation Angles: You can promise them more thrills than usual in this one.

THEME: Western in which Tom overcomes every obstacle in the grand sweepstakes obstacle race, saves the heavily mortgaged ranch of the girl and then wins her for his wife.

Produced and distributed by Fox. Length, 4,399 feet. Released, March 11th, 1928. The Cast: Tom Mix, Sally Blane, Heine Conklin, Charles Byers, Lew Harvey, Grace Marvin, William Ryno. Story by Harry Sinclair. Director, Benjamin Stoloff. Scenario by Fred Myton.

The Golden Clown

Tale of Punchinello

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

THE tale of the clown who hides his sorrow beneath a mask of merriment, this story in a tragic vein has been artistically presented and acted by Gosta Ekman and his leading lady, Karina Bell. It is a much better Swedish importation than "Discord;" there's a sincerity about its scenes, especially those dealing with the clown's grief, his vain pursuit for lost happiness.

An obscure clown who leapt into fame overnight, he loses his wife while at the height of his success. For some reason not convincingly brought out in the film she runs off with another man. The tragic note is introduced when the young wife ends her life. The memories of what could have been, of the brief span of happiness he knew with his wife, drive the clown to drink. When he sees among his audience the man who caused his unhappiness he subtly threatens his life and the man dies of heart-failure. Searching the man's pockets he discovers the existence of a child—his child and his dead wife's. So there is some refuge from his unforgetful past and recompense for the future.

The theme of Punchinello and his sorrowing heart hidden 'neath a guise of laughter makes a fine foundation on which to build a tale of human feelings and deep emotion. Director A. W. Sandberg did a good job by it here.

Drawing Power: Poor. The little highbrow cinemas can play it but other houses should have a strong companion attraction to offer with it. Exploitation Angles: Use a clown sandwichman to ballyhoo the film. Feature Ekman as the Faust of Ufa's production already seen in this country.

THEME: Heart drama. A successful clown loses his wife, who commits suicide. The clown cannot forget his sorrows, but he later finds that she had left him a child, the image of herself. He finds balm for his sadness in caring for the child.

Produced in Sweden by Nordisk Films Co. Distributed here by Pathe. Released, December, 1927. Length, 8 reels. The Cast: Gosta Ekman, Karina Bell, Maurice De Feraudy, Edmonde Guy, Robert Schmidt, Eric Bertner, Kate Fabian.

Spoilers of the West

A New McCoy Western

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

M-G-M'S Irish star is an army lieutenant ordered to drive out obstinate trappers who have encroached on the Indian's lands. Punctuated by some fine action shots on the open plains, the picture has a strong flavor of buckskin and war paint. The threatening attitude of the redskins actuates a near massacre, which is narrowly averted by the hero, who, in true western fashion, rides out to meet the advancing Indian army with a bullet hole through his shoulder.

Besides the masculine McCoy there is also William Fairbanks in the role of the pseudo villain. These two put up a tremendous scrap when they first meet. But as Fairbanks is the heroine's brother he could not very well be a genuine villain; in the last reel, therefore, you see them fast friends and McCoy the proud possessor of the girl, Marjorie Daw.

In this western are Generals Sherman and Custer, who are shown trying to negotiate a treaty with the Indians. It does not carry the punch and adventurous spirit of the star's previous vehicle, "Winners of the Wilderness," but it is good western fare, nevertheless.

Drawing Power: McCoy is not so well known as some of the other cowboy stars as yet, but still his pictures are strong enough to please the majority of western fans. Suitable for neighborhood houses. Exploitation Angles: Play up the historical angle and the Indian flavor. The garb of the red men is an attractor. You can get the school children to write an essay on the Indian.

THEME: Army lieutenant during the frontier days is delegated to drive from Indian land all white men who are staying there in violation of the government's treaty with the red men. He receives opposition from a young girl boss of a settlement but narrowly averts a massacre when the Indians threaten an attack and are prevailed to wait until the following day. The girl realizes the foolishness of spite, moves from the lands and later weds the lieutenant, whom she has come to love.

Produced and distributed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Released, December, 1927. Length, 4,784 feet. The Cast: Tim McCoy, William Fairbanks, Marjorie Daw, Charles Thurston, Chief Big Tree. Story by J. T. Neville. Scenario by Madeleine Ruthven and Ross B. Wills. Titles by Joe Farnham. Director, W. S. Van Dyke.

"Dog Heaven"

(M-G-M-Roach—Two Reels)

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

QUITE different and superior from the average two-reel comedy is this "Our Gang" opus in which Pete, the dog, has the most prominent role. The novel idea of having the dog relate a tale of woe is humorously handled. The gang is in the background most of the time, except for Fatty, the dog's master, who plays a very important part in the recountal of a dog's sorrow.

Pete does some remarkable facial work in the many closeups that he is subjected to. What a sad, melancholy hang-dog look he wears! They must have applied make-up to his features in these scenes in which he looks so woebegone, but even then it is remarkable how much of pathos can be extracted from the expressions of this canine. The scenes in which he goes to the dogs, as it were, and in which he frequents a dog speakeasy are well done.

And this can be said for the entire comedy.

The Law and the Man

Program Fare

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

OCTAVUS ROY COHEN'S stories generally make good reading, but when a motion picture director gets hold of one of them it seems that he becomes muddled and does a mediocre job. Take this picture, for instance: not such a bad story, some effective situations for the display of human emotion, some opportunities for virile characterization; but what has the director done with this material? He has gone into much detail, it is true, but he has so shaped it that hardly any animation is apparent in the scenes. He has let everything progress stiffly. His picture needs an easy flow, a looseness, and more motion.

Tom Santschi, the heavy of many a movie yarn, is the stalwart hero, the thoughtful politician, desperately in love with the district attorney, Gladys Brockwell. About all Tom does (in the way of acting) is walk around the sets in a dress suit. His role calls for him to look the silently suffering hero. Miss Brockwell fares much better in the role of the attorney. Robert Ellis is the conventional mean cuss.

Drawing Power: Very ordinary in pulling strength. Exploitation Angles: Play up author and Santschi and Miss Brockwell.

THEME: Drama of a boss politician and his willingness to protect the district attorney, the woman he loves. Her finance forges a check, and she, in honor bound to prosecute him, is in a quandary until the politician tries to assume the guilt. She sees through his act and finally learns the true villany of her fiance.

Produced and distributed by Rayart (S. R.). Released, December, 1927. Length, 5,916 feet. The Cast: Tom Santschi, Gladys Brockwell, Robert Ellis, Florence Turner and Tom Ricketts. Director, Scott Pembroke.

Alex the Great

Slow and Entirely Uninteresting

(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

AN H. C. Witwer story appearing in a magazine is full of wisecracks and good, snappy readable material, but on the screen—that is something else again. It is a pretty difficult matter to picture six reels of wisecracks and to convey the pep and dash that characterize Witwer stories, particularly where there is little real accompanying action as there is in this one.

Richard "Skeets" Gallagher, in the title role, gives one just the opposite impression that would be conveyed in a Witwer word picture. One is inclined to be rather sympathetic with a Witwer "fresh guy," but not so with Gallagher in the portrayal of this role. In fact, one is inclined to wish him nothing but bad luck when he starts his career of freshness to conquer New York directly from a small town.

The picture is almost entirely devoid of action and its value is not enhanced any by continued repetitions for laugh purposes. Gallagher, time after time, feigns shaking hands and then embarrasses his victim instead by pointing over his own shoulder. Done once, it might have a semblance of humor, but entirely too much footage is wasted to the exclusion of some more lively action in its repetition. The same is true of the hero's "smartness" in repeatedly extracting cigars from Cousin Ed's pocket. A full six course dinner is also wastage of much footage, while Cousin Ed studies a book on etiquette to discern just how each course should be handled and having the waiter take each course from him while he is still studying.

It may be impossible to adapt Witwer humor to the screen. At any rate, it failed in this instance.

Drawing Power: The popularity of the author may bring them into the house, but the picture has little chance on its merits. Exploitation Angles: A wisecracking contest, or a contest along the lines of Witwer's trick titles, may act as a stimulant.

THEME: Comedy in which a small town wisecracker invades New York and, through his freshness, wins himself a general sales manager's job and the hand of the daughter of a wealthy manufacturer.

Produced and distributed by FBO. Released May 13th, 1928. Length, 5,872 feet. The Cast: Richard "Skeets" Gallagher, Albert Conti, Patricia Avery, Ruth Dwyer, Charles Byer. Original story by H. C. Witwer. Directed by Dudley Murphy.

Primanerliebe

Serious and Heavy

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

RESTLESS youth revolting against the rigid conventions tenaciously upheld by their elders, is the age old and difficult theme the Germans tackle here. Still remembering the horror of war, youth questions the authority of the old. It is a sociological question, this study of youth and its yearnings, and the Teutons prove their intrinsic worth as makers of cinema

For they have done a clean-cut job. They show old age's sternness and calmness in contrast to youth's hot headedness and futile gropings. They give you a realistic idea of the eternal conflict between young and old, the old against the new. There are two suicides among the principal players; the mood, therefore, is tragic and very morbid. Not the thing for the average theatregoer, who desires something amusing, something that will give him sparkle and a kick. His more serious brother may find mighty interesting this study of adolescence, but as the average fan is vastly in the majority, and has given overwhelming evidence that he is not interested in cinematics weighed down with heavy thought, "Primanerliebe" will prove weak at American box offices.

There are some finely wrought types among the members of the faculty at the university, where the spirit of restlessness and rebelion permeates the lives of the students.

Drawing Power: For the discriminating movie goer. In telligent audience should find it interesting. Exploitation Angles: Much has been said about modern youth, well, there's an angle. An exhibitor can get high school students and the like to write concerning their idea on the question, and perhaps you can get your paper's editor interested in the film.

THEME: A sociological study of the difficulties encountering Germany's youth after the late war. It is the story of the rebellion of students against their teachers.

Produced in Germany. Distributed here by Scenic Films (S.R.). Length, 6,500 ft. The Cast: Fritz Kortner, Greta Mosheim, Wolfgang Zilzer and others. Director, Robert Land.

"Hold Your Hat"

(Fox-Imperial—Two Reels)

(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

THERE is a lot of good knockabout comedy as well as a number of humorous situations in this Fox two-reeler directed by [illegible] West. The cast too is a good one having as its principals, Sally Phipps, Nick Stuart, Thelma Hill, Arthur Housman and a clever dog.

There are all sorts of complications between a married couple of a week's standing and another married couple of somewhat longer standing, and it is all the fault of the dog. Said canine insists upon taking the straw hat of its master and placing it in the room across the hall occupied by the older married couple, the husband of which is a very jealous individual.

The younger married man follows the dog after his hat into the other apartment and is discovered by the jealous husband. When this is repeated two or three times the husband becomes completely enraged and a lively quarrel ensues. The newlywed decides to get rid of the jinx hat. He wishes it upon the very young son of his employer. The boy finding it too big for him pads it with a paper bearing the formula of his dad's latest invention.

Newlywed loses his job and the hat goes with him. The young son later reveals what he has done with the formula and the boss and office force start a chase for the hat, whose owner is trying his best to be rid of. The hat invariably returns and is eventually located by the boss, who rewards the newlywed by making him his general manager.

"Taking the Count"

(Universal—Two Reels)

(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

MIKE and Ike have a better story than usual in this one of their series and it will undoubtedly be appreciated by the lovers of short comedies. They have been so frequently trimmed by the fair sex that each agrees to pay $1,000 to the other if he falls again, and then each proceeds to fall almost immediately.

They are interior decorators in this one and that brings them more or less into close touch with the feminine members of the families. They are unfortunate in their first job in having to decorate a home where there are two beauteous daughters of a mother who would wed one of them to a Count.

Instead of proceeding to their work of decorating, Mike and Ike fall very hard for each of the daughters, each at the same time trying to convince the other that he is paying strict attention to business so as to save the $1,000 forfeit. The real Count arrives and gets a rough deal all around. Sizing up the situation, however, he sees there is no chance with the girls, and at the same time, perceiving the diamonds on the mother, he leans in her direction.

Mike proceeds to the nearest minister with one of the girls and he is surprised there upon the arrival of Ike and the other. Then the quartet is surprised when mama and the Count arrive. A triple wedding follows and all ends happily.

"No Fare"

(Educational—Two Reels)

"BIG BOY" is the little cut-up on a Pullman in this Juvenile comedy plentifully supplied with laugh-provoking situations. Lila Leslie, Wallace Lupino, Eva Thatcher and little Jackie Levine are the supporting cast.

To fool the conductor, the boy's mother dresses him in baby clothes. This makes "Big Boy" mad. After he has broken the conductor's watch, the latter becomes mad also. There are chases up and down the length of the cars, into the berths, and under the seats. Also on the train are a troupe of midgets and the boy falls hard for the tiny wife of one of them, thinking her an attractive girl, and insisting on kissing her even in the presence of her irate husband.

Charles Lamont again directed the child player with good results.

"Mark of the Frog"

(Pathe-Serial—10 Episodes)

(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

THIS new Pathe serial is off to a good start with the first three chapters setting the foundation for what promises innumerable thrills and plenty of action before the master frog is completely exposed. As in the last of these serials the master is completely hooded and even those crooks working closest to him do not know his identity.

This story develops out of a million dollars loot entrusted to one crook by another twenty years ago. The first crook had to make his getaway in a hurry, but said he would be back after his share of the loot. Meantime the holder of the money has gathered about him a band of criminals and tramps, each of whom has been branded on the arm with the mark of a frog. This band is terrorizing New York and has the police completely baffled.

There is no time lost in getting the story right down to action. Donald Reed and Margaret Morris are almost immediately victims of a mysterious gas attack which is made upon them via a chimney and which finds them prisoners in a locked room. They barely make their getaway before being overcome by the deadly fumes. And when they do it is only to plunge into a series of misadventures that undoubtedly will keep them extremely busy through the ten chapters.

"The Mark of the Frog" was adapted from "The Fellowship of the Frog," by Edgar Wallace. It was directed by Arch B. Heath and has in the cast, in addition to Donald Reed and Margaret Morris, in the leading roles, such well known players as Tony Hughes, Frank B. Miller, Frank Lackteen, Helen Greene, Gus de Weil, Edward Roseman, George Harcourt, Sidney Paxton, Morgan Jones and William Willis.

While it is early in the story yet (but three chapters having been disclosed in the projection room) it seems safe enough to predict that for action, intrigue, romance and horror this series will be at least up to the usual standard.

"The Girl From Nowhere"

(Sennett-Pathe—Two Reels)

THIS is a companion picture to one recently released under the title of "The Girl from Everywhere" and is so similar to it that it is hard to distinguish between them. Daphne Pollard is the featured player and her comedy antics should be good for many laughs. As in the companion picture, however, the Sennett bathing girls, in a number of artistic sequences done in color, will attract the most attention. They are beautiful girls, lavishly displayed and the photography could hardly be improved upon.

The action takes place in a motion picture studio where a picture is in the process of making and Miss Pollard is the wardrobe mistress. There is a temperamental director putting the cast through their paces and there are the usual disturbances to bring in the comedy element which dominates the picture.

The cast is a good one, those in the principal supporting roles to Miss Pollard being, Dot Farley, Mack Swain, Sterling Holloway, Madeline Fields and Carolle Lombard. The picture has the same setting as its companion piece and the action is almost identical, so it can be tabbed as one of the good ones done by Sennett.

"Gauge of Battle"

(Universal—Two Reels)

(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

FRED GILMAN is the featured player in this western featurette of the Texas Ranger series. It is the not unfamiliar story of the wayward brother of the girl he loves falling into the clutches of the ranger and then winning his freedom by his heroic actions.

Gilman, as Breezy Layton, is much in love with Anne Creason and they are to be married shortly, but first Breezy must clean up a band of cattle rustlers secretly headed by Bruce Lantard, a neighborly rancher, who induced Anne's young brother to join his band.

Breezy strikes the trail of the band and after a desperate chase captures the young brother, whom he is compelled to place under arrest. Bringing him in he tells the truth to the girl he loves and she refuses to believe it. She seeks Bob's release and is encouraged by Lantard, the band leader. When Breezy refuses to release the boy Anne breaks her engagement and promises to marry Lantard.

Eventually Lantard is cornered and after subduing Breezy makes his getaway with the girl a prisoner. Meantime Bob Creason releases his bonds and goes to the rescue of both his sister and Breezy. He arrives just in time to save their lives and as a consequence is given his freedom. Anne, fully realizing her mistake begs forgiveness and there is the usual happy ending.

"Listen, Sister"

(Educational—Two Reels)

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

LUPINO LANE and his brother, Wallace Lupino, resort to girlie's dresses as their comedy habiliments in this tale with the confidential title. These two are an excellent team; they know their flips and falls, are troupers to the core, and, in addition, have something of the artist about them. Lane, in particular, is blessed with a gift for pantomime and is very clever with his bodily movements and gestures. Wallace, too, is a versatile and effective performer. When Educational begins to produce talking subjects these two boys can step right to the fore and show their oral as well as pantomimical worth. We repeat, they're a good comedy team.

Lane has a twin sister, newly married, whose happiness is threatened by her guardian, who promises he will cut off her allowance if she does not continue school. That she may have her honeymoon, Lane is prevailed upon to take her place at the girls' school. The comedy takes him into several tight situations, which are not a whit relieved when the school authorities are informed of the presence of a thief masquerading in women's dress. There are swarms of pretty girls, among them the blonde Estelle Bradley, a liberal quantity of humor and foolishment from the Lupino Brothers.

Clem Beauchamp (Jerry Drew) directed effectively.

"The Ole' Swimmin' 'Ole"

(Universal-Cartoon—One Reel)

OSWALD and his party of friends have a gay old time at this attractive swimming hole until the town marshal puts an end to their capers after they almost put an end to him. They arrive on the back of a mule and then convert said mule into a springboard on which they cavort most humorously. The marshal is taken care of temporarily on his arrival and Oswald steals his suspenders, which are used for a swing until they are completely wrecked when it comes the hippo's turn. His splash into to pool clears it of water and then the gang makes its getaway. This series is holding up remarkably well and Walt Disney is injecting an ample supply of comedy in each picture.—CHESTER J. SMITH.

"Green-Eyed Love"

(Educational—One Reel)

This Cameo comedy stars George Hall, a comedian who appeared on Educational's program once before. He has Estelle Bradley and Ruby McCoy as his feminine support. Gino Corrado is seen as the heavy.

Slapstick, rough and tumble, the comedy comes to pass when Hall's wife, the blonde Miss Bradley, becomes intensely jealous as she believes her husband is having several affairs with other women. When the jeweler's daughter comes to the house, she thinks the latter is one of them and so you have a family fracas, which is enlivened when the heavy follows the jeweler's girl, his girl, into the house, also. The regular slapstick melee follows.

Zion Myers directed. The comedy is about average.—RAYMOND GANLY.

News Reel Resume

The tragic figures of the latest attempt to span the Atlantic in a plane from Europe are shown in Fox Films, Vol. 9, No. 50. Other stories take in scenes of Prince Carol of Roumania and ex-crown Prince of Germany; Australian boys sporting on the beach; where Lindbergh landed on a farm; the funeral of Marshal Diaz; girl jockeys at Tiajuana. The extent of the damage and ruin caused by the dam break in California is also portrayed.

Paramount News No. 67 also had a grim reminder of the dam break, and showed Lindbergh after he was forced down by fog. The funeral of the dead Italian commander is one of the important stories as well as some shots of the two lost English fliers. An on fire in Texas; girl jockeys; the army's "sea sleds"; and jungle jazz are concluding tid bits.

No. 68 shows a speed boat race at Miami; Lindbergh receiving the Wilson Award; a blizzard in Norway; Byrd airmen skiing in Vermont; Berlin's police rookies; the wife of Bobby Jones; and an Indian sculptor. Perhaps the most important subjects in the reel were the following: the flood's toll of death in California; Jack Dempsey at crippled children's home; and the navy bring the S-4 to surface.

Kinograms No. 5379 had scenes, also, of the fliers lost in the Atlantic, and the destruction caused by the dam break. Other interesting presentations were the Hungarians in New York honoring Kossuth; English schoolboys in steeplechase; Trader Horn; the national game of the Spaniards; child Charleston dancers, and Germany remembering dead who fell in the war.

No. 5380 records the navy raising the S-4; the flood sufferers in California; and Lindy receiving the Wilson prize. The St. Patrick's Day parade in New York; the international flower show; society in Florida and a regatta at Miami are filmed also.

Pathe News No. 25 shows the California disaster; the missing fliers; Marshal Diaz' burial; and the unveiling of the statue of Kossuth. Other items refer to principals in forthcoming McLarnin-Mandell tilt; a dog show; German boy scouts; girl jockeys; and senators investigating soft coal situation.

No. 26 has additional views of Lindy accepting the Wilson Award; the S-4 recovered from the deep; and California's flood-swept area. A unique design in airplanes; a water pageant in the Philippines and feats of a crack rifle shot are numbered among the scenes.

In International News Vo. 10, No. 22, the spectator sees more shots of the girl jockeys; the funeral cortege of General Diaz; Hinchliffe and Miss Mackay; and the California dam disaster. Other snapshots include those of Walter Hagen; Johnnie Risko; Jack Redmond; Trader Horn; a healthy family raised on raw victuals; a combination boat and auto; mountain lions and battle scenes from the Chinese war.

No. 23 presents the motorboat race at Miami; Japanese children playing in the snow; the flower show; take-off of plane on flight to boost airplane trade; Lindbergh and the Wilson prize; circus dogs; and the salvaged S-4.

Buffalo's theatre managers have just welcomed a newcomer into the ranks. He is Edward C. Garrity, who succeeds William K. Saxton as manager of Loew's State. Garrity came here after managing Loew's Columbia in Boston for the last three years. Saxton goes to Syracuse to take over the new Loew's theatre there. Garrity put over a clever exploitation stunt in his first week here, using Pat Rooney, who was headlining last week's vaudeville bill at Loew's State, as the means of enticing quite a few customers. "Rooney Night" was duly announced and held, Pat inviting all the folks with the same family name as his to come to the theatre and meet him, as guests of himself and Manager Ed Garrity. The Rooneys came, about fifty of them, and the stunt served to draw many more than 50 patrons who wanted to be in on the Rooney family gathering.

New York & New Jersey

THE Little theatre movement launched in New York City by the Fifth Avenue Playhouse Group, Inc., has by all indications proven a successful experiment if a consistent expansion can be taken for evidence.

Cannot Match Images With His Effect Projector

JACK EBERLEY, JR., of Plainfield, N. J., says that a new Brenkert Effect Projector recently was installed in his theatre and he has so far been unable to make both top and bottom systems project the same size of picture. This, in spite of all he has done to correct the trouble and from the way Eberley writes it appears that he has done plenty—apparently everything but make the two pictures match in size.

Here is his letter:

Dear Sir:

On Jan. 23 there was installed in our theatre a new Brenkert F-3 Effect Projector.

Since that time I have been trying to obtain two images of equal size with both the stereopticon lenses and the flood lenses, but so far I have been unsuccessful. Therefore, I am writing you with the hope that you may be able to help me out.

When the projector arrived here direct from the factory, there was no instruction sheet, although I have since obtained one from the supply dealer in this district. This I have followed very carefully, together with the advices which I received from the supply dealer's salesman.

Cannot Match Images for Size

The trouble here is that I cannot get two images of equal size with neither the two front lenses nor the two rear lenses. The top lamp projects the smallest image regardless of the lens used; also, if I align the two stereo lenses so as to make their images center with each other on the screen and then slide the projection lens assembly mount back so as to use the two flood lenses, these flood lenses will not center their images on the screen.

I have checked all the measurements and aligning rules given in the instruction booklet I have; have also checked the crater diameter on each lamp; the arc distance from each rear condenser; and the condenser focal lengths (these are the same as were sent with the lamp). The projector is approximately level right and left at the lamps.

Am furnishing the following data for your information:

The working distances of the lenses are:

	Top	Bottom
Stereo Lenses...	37¼ inches	36½ inches
Flood Lenses....	14¾ inches	14 inches

The arc lamps use 30 amperes at 75 volts, D. C. on a 170 ft. throw and 18 ft. picture for slide projection with 32 inch lenses (apparently matched) 16 inch lens for flood. The projector works at an angle of 6 degrees.

I might say further that the image from the top stereo lens is about 4 inches smaller all around than that from the bottom although the bottom flood image is about 4 ft. bigger in diameter than the top flood image.

Trusting that I have furnished you with sufficient data to work on, and I will be only too glad to forward any information that I have overlooked, I am

Very truly yours,
Jack Eberley, Jr.

A Case of Unmatched Lenses?

In answer to Eberley's letter as given above we immediately wrote him saying that it was simply a case of unmatched lenses and to write the Brenkert factory explaining the difficulty to them. Eberley, however, had different ideas and, in fact, was at least one step ahead of us, because he even more immediately wrote back to us saying that the trouble could not possibly be one of unmatched lenses because he had exchanged the lenses in the top and bottom systems and the trouble had still persisted, much to his disgust.

In this second letter he goes on to say that, "first, on installation, both stereo and flood lenses were unmatched and later I received two 16 inch lenses for effect projection. As I explained in my first letter, these were apparently unmatched, but on projection the bottom image was at least 4 ft. larger in diameter than that of the top. The results were the same when the lenses were switched around and the lens from the top system was placed in the bottom one.

I had on order at the same time two matched 32 inch lenses for slide projection and these arrived two or three days prior to my writing you the first time. Upon installing these lenses the results on slide projection were the same as mentioned above regarding the effect projection and the same procedure was followed in both cases.

Another point I would like to call to your attention is that, with the stereo lenses centered to make both pictures match on the screen, you would naturally assume that in sliding the projection lens assembly piece back to the effect position that the effect lenses would match images on the screen too, but they do not. Will you please explain the cause of this?

Impossible for Flood Matching to Agree with Stereo Matching

Taking the easiest thing first, Friend Eberley, we would like to say that with such a machine as the Brenkert Effect Projector it is quite impossible to make the matching of the stereo lenses agree with the matching of the flood lenses when the projection lens assembly mount is moved from one position to the other. This, for the very simple reason that the optic systems on the two lamps are placed at an angle to each other to make them match on the screen. Now, when the projection lens assembly is moved back to the flood position, the lenses are moved back horizontally so that the top system light beam which formerly passed through the stereo lens when this lens was placed at its proper focal position, now passes above the flood lens (placed nearer to the lamphouse). In order to make the top light pass through the top flood lens, therefore, it is necessary to raise the flood lens on its vertical support rods.

On the other hand, if the two flood lenses were adjusting to give a match on the screen and the assembly were then moved forward to show slide projection, it would be necessary to lower the top stereo lens in order to again make the two systems match.

Check Openings Which Are Being Imaged

Coming back to your trouble in making the two flood images match up for size, Friend Eberley, the only thing that we can say—or for that matter, that remains to be said—is to check the size of the two openings which are being imaged on the screen.

After all, the Brenkert Projector is nothing more than two simple optical systems which are supposed to be identical in every respect for ordinary work such as slide projection.

Each system is composed of an object which is imaged on the screen by means of a single projection lens. In order to make these two screen images be of exactly the same size, it is only necessary to fulfill two simple conditions. First, the two projection lenses must be of exactly the same focal length. In other words, of matched focal length. Second, the objects imaged by the two systems must be of exactly the same size. The throw must, of necessity, be the same since the two systems are tied together and both project upon the same screen.

Now, if you are absolutely certain that the two projection lenses are of matched focal length (your exchange of the two lenses should warrant this certainty) then the root of the trouble must be in the size of the objects which are being imaged on the screen.

In your case, the object which is being imaged will be either the slide carrier opening or the opening in the iris shuttle placed just in front of the condenser lenses of each system.

It seems reasonable to suppose that you are focussing the outline of the iris shuttle opening because this is commonly done when making adjustments of this kind on the machine.

In order to obtain the same size of flood from each system (assuming the projection lenses to be matched) it is absolutely necessary that both iris shutters be opened to the fullest extent, else one system will project a smaller flood than the other.

In fact, if the iris shutter of your top system be closed down as little as 3/16 inch, Eberley, the top system will project a flood which will be 4 ft. smaller than the bottom system under your conditions. By this we mean that if the opening on the top iris is ⅜ of an inch smaller in diameter than that in the bottom iris there will be a difference of 4 ft. in the sizes of the flood images. is at this point in the system.

Newspaper Opinions on New Pictures

"A Texas Steer"—First National, Loew's State Theatre, New Orleans

Times Picayune: "Just too good to be true. Is in tune with the Rogers wit in its sly digs at Congress. Louise Fazenda helps comedy tempo."

"The Patent Leather Kid"—First National, Erlanger Theatre, Philadelphia

Public Ledger: "Barthelmess come into his own again. Picture packed with action, colorful and pungent in atmosphere, rich with humor, and yet above it all shines splendid, perfectly shaded characterization which Barthelmess creates. Best opportunity he has had for long time, and he makes most of it."

Record: "Will go down in screen history with other big pictures so often spoken of as masterpieces. Barthelmess reaches new heights. One of best films of year. Love story will go down as epic of screen. Devoid of what one might call cream-puff scenes."

Inquirer: "Barthelmess has done finer and more lasting thing than in any picture in which he ever has appeared. He has done as nearly a perfect job as could be done by any living cinema star. Shrewdly written drama."

News: "Barthelmess regains his place among leading satellites in movie heavens through superb interpretation. Ranks with the best of recent films. Abounds with romance, thrills, comedy, tense moments and pathos. Within the scope of the year's ten best pictures."

Bulletin: "Barthelmess can still scale emotional heights. He makes the film worth seeing. Packs a punch in both parts—the prize ring and the battlefield."

Evening Ledger: "Barthelmess' strongest screen vehicle to date. Recaptures that quality of acting that made his 'Tol'able David' noteworthy. By force of his personality and the logical development of the excellent story, 'Kid' takes his place in the hearts of the audience. Provides its quota of thrills in the takn scenes."

"Gentlemen Prefer Blondes"—Paramount, Rivoli Theatre New York City

Evening World: "Piquant little yarn shows to infinitely better advantage here than it did in its other two mediums (the book and the play). Its popularity in this form will be many times greater than heretofore. Miss Taylor is superb."

Telegram: "This girl (Miss Taylor) in addition to a disturbing amount of Glynnish beauty, contributes a well-nigh perfect caricature of blonde hussies in general and Lorelei in particular."

Graphic: "It is well cast, amusing, filled with lively action, and will probably claim in celluloid the wide attention it received in book form. Ruth Taylor . . . is the ideal Lorelei. . . . One of the best characterizations in the whole picture is Sterling's in the part of Gus Eisman. St. Clair deserves a few laurel leaves for his directional work . . ."

Journal: "Ruth Taylor was a good selection for the part. . . . It's good entertainment and Miss Loos' shrewd observations on lilies that neither toil nor spin are well characterized. . . ."

Morning World: "A film which has faithfully captured the hilarious qualities of both versions (book and play). . . . The film version retains all the cynical implications of the original and emerges as a wickedly satirical and uncommonly amusing screen comedy."

American: "Ruth Taylor is a petite blonde, and an exceptionally clever actress. . . . She (Anita Loos) has made a particularly adept job of her favorite character creations of gay young life . . . it is amazing the way it holds one's interest."

Times: "A splendid pictorial translation of Anita Loos' book. . . . Ruth Taylor fits Miss Loos' description of her young heroine in a surprising fashion. . . . This film is an infectious treat. St. Clair has given it just the right touch."

Tribune: "Skillfully cast, well directed, faithful to the book and rather amusing in its titles."

Mirror: "A good show. . . . It's funny, wise and sparkling with Lorelei's most profound gags out of the original best seller. Ruth Taylor plays the blonde for all the rich role is worth."

Telegraph: "The picture can't fail to make money. . . . The most interesting thing about the picture is Ruth Taylor."

News: "Malcolm St. Clair did an excellent job. . . . Ruth Taylor is a perfect Lorelei, and the rest of the cast is well chosen."

"Sorrell and Son"—United Artists, Rialto Theatre, Omaha

Bee: "No longer is it 'Have you read Sorrell and Son?' The question of the hour is 'Have you seen Sorrel and Son?' If you don't see this drama of father-love you are foregoing an outstanding cinema production of season. There is so much that is notable about this achievement for both author and director. Too often an ardent admirer of book finds little to warrant his praise in screening of the work, but on this occasion there has been little if any erring in the transposition. Motivation that captures spririts and plays on emotions. Nothing short of magnificent describes work of Warner."

World Herald: "Will grip your heart with soul stirring picture of paternal and filial devotion. Book long ago we placed on our 'twelve foot shelf.' Picture is among very best we have seen. We watched a sea of faces, and beheld tears of sympathy and understanding in eyes of old and young."

"Wings" — Paramount, World Cinema Theatre, Copenhagen, Denmark

Politiken: "Great and mighty wing-song in memory of heroic aviators of the war. With imposing technique they show us all neck-breaking acrobatic stunts that can be executed in air."

Berlinske Tidende: "The several bold panegyrics which preceded the premiere did not prove false."

Dagens Nyheder: Real picture, which deeply affected and overcame. Is not one-sided; it gives in general full honor to flying cavaliers, on whichever side they fought."

Aftonbladet: "One felt repeatedly sentiment of real life making one's hair literally stand on end with excitement. An immense success."

"The Noose"—First National, Washington Street Olympia Theatre, Boston

Herald: "Barthelmess seems to have struck his stride again. An exceptionally vivid portrayal. Melodrama of best kind. Excellent screen entertainment."

Traveler: "Three fine performances; Barthelmess, Alice Joyce and Love. A surprise ending."

Transcript: "Dillon manipulates the lens as though it were the eye of spectator."

Advertiser: "Vivid melodrama. Exciting plot, taught and tingling drama. Barthelmess acts. Director has taken a hint from the German producers."

Post: "Barthelmess is even better in 'The Noose' than he was in 'The Patent Leather Kid'"

Globe: "Barthelmess gives an admirable portrayal."

American: "Stirring melodrama, provides exciting entertainment."

"If I Were Single"—Warner Bros., Roxy Theatre, New York City

Morning World: "Gaily acted and full of merriment and wholesome morals."

Graphic: "Vastly superior. Frothy and engaging type of story."

Post: "Blithest and most genuine comedy to show its face at Roxy in a long time. Good picture to celebrate first anniversary of Mr. Rothafel's theatre, to which this reporter can wish no more pleasant birthday greeting than such a picture on first every week."

American: Has authentic note that lifts it from rut of commonplace movie hokum, and makes it worth one's attention. Boasts ineresting cast and amusing subject matter."

Times: "Diverting comedy."

Sun: "Brightly conceived and executed. On the whole, production is pleasing; acting and direction good."

News: "Has several mighty amusing episodes and some singularly good performances."

"Chicago After Midnight"—FBO, Hippodrome Theatre New York City

Morning World: "Robust and exciting melodrama. Story prepared and screened with such showmanship, such suspense and such coherence as to take rank alongside any of recent melodramas either of stage or film."

Daily News: "One of most interesting of such films this reviewer has seen in many a day. Its characters, led by director, are not forced but wholly plausible."

Times: "Unusually well acted and adroitly directed underworld story. . . . Players natural in their movements and expressions; their actions are in a sensible tempo. Characters possess distinct natures. Sequences so handled that there is a decided suspense, and interest is cleverly sustained."

Morning Telegraph: "Ince as actor as he is a director, comes through with another worthy performance and excellent directorial work. Is surrounded by a group of veteran players who acquit themselves creditably."

Evening World: "Really worthwhile crook story, capitalizing present-day activities of Chicago's underworld denizens. There is sense to the action, and this is more than can be said of the average crook picture. One finds oneself deeply thrilled by action of story."

"The King of Kings"—Pathe-DeMille, Covent Garden Opera House, London, England

Westminster Gazette: "The film is moving and convincing."

Morning Post: "H. B. Warner, who portrays the leading role, could not have been more impressive and his work is the most consoling and the most compensating of the film."

Daily Telegraph: "The King of Kings" is reverent and without offense."

Charles Ray, under contract to Universal, plays the part of a prizefighter in "The Count of Ten"

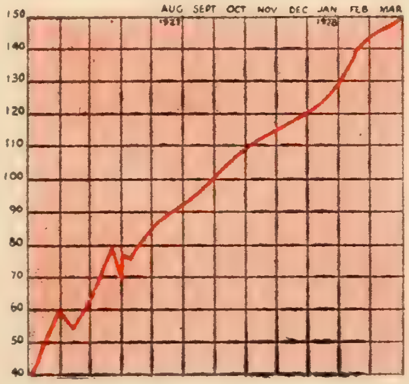
THEY DIDN'T DO RIGHT BY NELL!

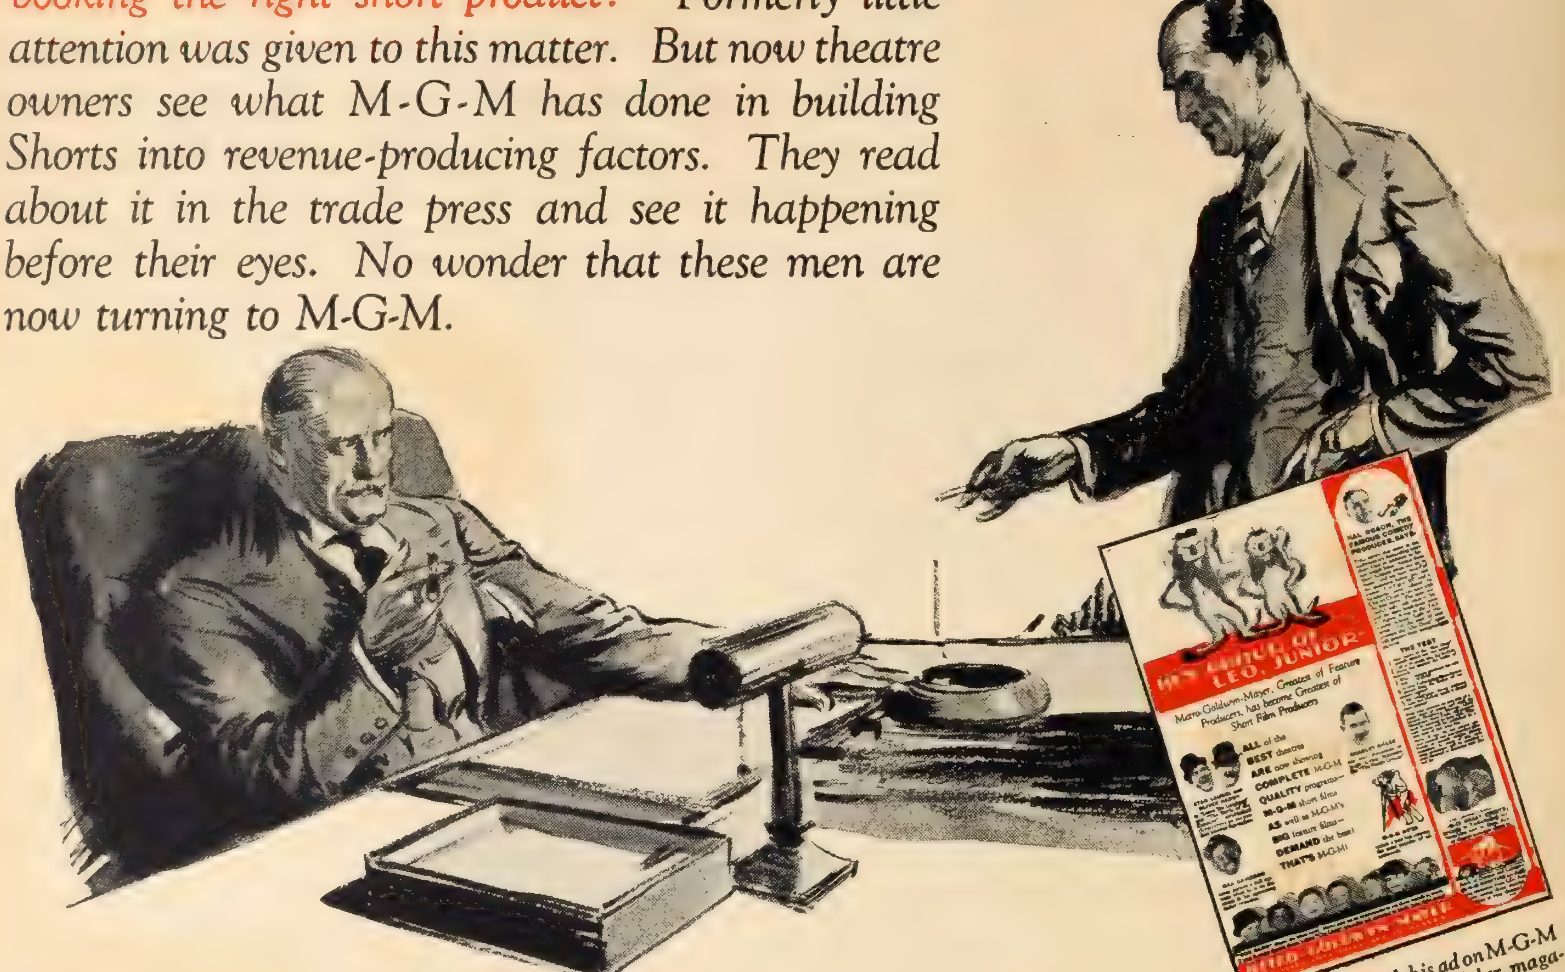
Do you realize that up to the time Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer entered the Short Subject field, these important little attractions were the step-children of the industry—



A nation-wide survey reveals the fact that within eight months M-G-M has climbed to leadership in distribution of Shorts and News-reels. The period is from last August to March. M-G-M's lead over this field is increasing daily.

IT took time and effort
FOR M-G-M to prove
TO exhibitors that Shorts
COULD be made to mean
REAL cash at the box-office
INSTEAD of just filling time
ON a program—
THE result is that

IN the executive offices of every important theatre circuit today this question is arising: "Are we booking the right short product?" Formerly little attention was given to this matter. But now theatre owners see what M-G-M has done in building Shorts into revenue-producing factors. They read about it in the trade press and see it happening before their eyes. No wonder that these men are now turning to M-G-M.



LEO, JUNIOR

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Greatest of Feature Producers, has become Greatest of Short Film Producers

ALL of the BEST theatres
ARE now showing
COMPLETE M-G-M
QUALITY programs—
M-G-M short films
AS well as M-G-M's
BIG feature films—
DEMAND the best!
THAT'S M-G-M!

HAL ROACH, THE FAMOUS COMEDY PRODUCER, SAYS

THE TEST

Millions will read this ad on M-G-M Shorts appearing in popular magazines, circulating nationally.

EXHIBITORS NOW LOOK TO M-G-M FOR THEIR SHORT PRODUCT TOO!

THE EDITOR of M. P. News says:

"Reviewers of short subjects are inclined to be blase in a projection room. It is a rare occurrence when a peep is heard. It was most astounding, therefore, when at a showing of a trio of Roach M-G-M comedies the usually silent projection room was in a continuous uproar. Laughs were as continuous and hearty as is heard from a whole theatreful at the usual comedy. The pictures were "Spook-spoofing" (Our Gang), "All For Nothing" (Chase), and "Pass the Gravy" (Davidson).

YOU cannot help but
MARVEL
AT the consistency
WITH which M-G-M has DELIVERED Short Subjects
SETTING a standard of

"OUR GANG" delivers happiness to every box-office. These rascals on your program draw like a feature. Their latest is "Edison, Marconi & Co." A masterpiece of laughs. Your folks get the fun, you get the mon! M-G-M is proud to give its customers Hal Roach's world-famous joy artists.

QUALITY in production
THAT has never been approached
IN this field hitherto—
THE industry now realizes
THAT M-G-M has come into SHORT Subjects
WITH the same intensity
AND enthusiasm with which
M-G-M revolutionized
FEATURE production
AND became
THE talk of the industry.
NO question now
BUT that M-G-M has become THE new SHORT Subject force
TO reckon with!

A PREDICTION FOR THE FUTURE!

(Read next page carefully –you'll agree!)

STAN LAUREL-OLIVER HARDY are the new comedy team sensation whose hit after hit have made them a sure-fire draw.

M-G-M NEWS swept into the newsreel field with typical Young Blood dash. Through its superior organization and more modern ideas it has won an amazing exhibitor following.

M-G-M GREAT EVENTS in Technicolor has won exhibitor approval as a most distinctive and beautiful dramatic series.

The Czarina's Secret

The Battle of Octopus and Lobster

M-G-M ODDITIES are showing on thousands of screens. These little life dramas caught by UFA the world over, are fascinating audiences everywhere.

10 POINTS

which from now on must necessarily influence all buyers of film service—

1—THE NEW SHORT SUBJECT. M-G-M's aggressive and successful activities in Shorts have given Shorts a new money-value at the box-office.

2—THE FUTURE OF SHORTS. Naturally the future of Shorts is in the hands of M-G-M to whom exhibitors now look for continued profits in this field.

3—THE IMPORTANCE OF SPECIALS. The effect on the public of M-G-M's five great Specials in one season is tremendous. "The Big Parade", "Ben-Hur", "The Student Prince", "The Enemy", "Love"—they stamp M-G-M as the most important name of all.

4—WEEK-TO-WEEK RELEASES. Exhibitors base their security on dependability of product. Again M-G-M averages higher in regular release than any other company.

5—STAR VALUES. The past year has proven that star values are of increased importance in drawing patronage to box-offices.

6—THE LEADING STARS. M-G-M is better equipped with important star names than all others: John Gilbert, Greta Garbo, Lon Chaney, William Haines, Marion Davies, Ramon Novarro, Norma Shearer, Syd Chaplin, Buster Keaton, McCoy, Dane-Arthur, etc.

7—IMPORTANCE OF SHOWMANSHIP. M-G-M is consistent in its promotional efforts. M-G-M's "Blonde-Brunette" emotional test tie-up with "Love" was one of the year's publicity sensations.

8—FUTURE PROMOTION. Among future promotional activities for M-G-M is the forthcoming tour of Leo, the M-G-M lion.

9—SUCCESSFUL BUYING. Exhibitors who booked M-G-M Shorts together with M-G-M features report that their whole program quality standard was raised, with attendant profits.

10—NEXT SEASON. Word has already gone forth that the smart buying for next year will be a complete M-G-M Quality Show.

A SERIES OF TWENTY JAMES CRUZE PRODUCTIONS

TO BE RELEASED DURING THE SEASON 1928-'29

MR. CRUZE will personally direct four super-features. The remaining sixteen productions will be filmed under his personal supervision and will be of a standard that will qualify them for release under the banner of James Cruze.

Veteran exhibitors know that Cruze productions are box-office winners. This master director has no "flops" registered against his record. Add to this fact, the guarantee that all pictures of the new series will be produced at a cost compatible with the purse of the independent exhibitor, and you have the ideal sales and releasing proposition.

James Cruze, Inc. is the name of the new producing concern and James Cruze is the man back of each of the twenty pictures.

PUBLISHED STORIES + FEATURE CASTS

Published fiction—the works of well known writers—will be the basis of every picture filmed by James Cruze, Inc. Famous and popular film players are to be cast in each of the twenty productions. Add to this the Cruze master touch of direction and you have the ideal motion picture—artistry and box-office appeal combined in a perfect blend.

Bear in mind that practical business administration is to parallel all production activity, assuring economy and saneness in the filming and handling of each of the twenty releases. However, there will be no skimping in production and every dollar spent will be reflected on the SCREEN.

Needed: An Awakening

Spirit, Energy, Progressiveness Made This Industry

By William A. Johnston

WE were talking the other day with an independent producer who stated forcefully the thought that the industry is in the doldrums.

"Apathy on every hand", he remarked.

"What's the answer?" we inquired.

"For one thing—lack of advertising," he replied. "The exhibitor is getting unsold on the industry. So are people in other branches. It's a serious situation, but few seem to realize it."

He also pointed out that stock companies were springing up in many sections, and giving real competition to picture houses.

"'Stock' is coming back—no mistake about it", he added. "Some of the theatres which used to give us good prices are no longer picture houses".

He named several of these—some right in New York, others in the Middle West.

"What does it all mean?" he asked us.

Well, we don't know that we are qualified to give the answer in full; but one thing is sure:

The apathy and smug self-satisfaction that exist in some quarters had better disappear—and soon.

We have written along these lines before, but it's a subject that needs a lot of comment, it seems.

The whole point appears to us to be this: the motion picture industry takes too much for granted.

Remember: we're dealing in entertainment. That's what the public expects and pays for. Good entertainment; novelty; flash; stuff with life and color in it properly advertised and presented.

We've been hearing for years what a big industry this is. Well, that's true. But you can't put your big studios or your real estate investments or the pictures of your millionaires on the screen.

When all is said and done, the industry is, in the minds of the public which pays the money that supports the industry, just as big as and no bigger than the picture they saw last night or they will see tomorrow.

All the maneuvers; all the mergers; all the politics of the business don't necessarily mean good pictures. You can't put mergers on the screen and make a dime on them.

The public is entirely familiar with the screen now. They don't get excited over "just a picture".

If you think that's a trite observation, we'll agree with you. But some of the production people act as if they had never heard it, judging by the pictures they turn out.

Nobody quarrels for a moment with the idea that waste must go and business practices be put into effect. It's not an easy job.

But, remember again: these internal moves don't mean a thing to the public—in themselves. The public is buying entertainment. It will have entertainment in some form and the motion picture is not the only form, by any means.

That's not pessimism. It's merely the statement of plain fact. Some fine pictures are made. But not enough.

That's one side of the story. The other is: it's a blunder of the first magnitude to get your industry into an apathetic condition.

It was made by spirit and energy and new ideas and progressiveness. And it needs a large quantity of those very qualities right now.

J. D. Williams Forms Company to Distribute British and Continental Films in U. S.

ANNOUNCEMENT was made this week in London by J. D. Williams of the formation of United Motion Picture Producers, Ltd., Company, organized for the specific purpose of distributing British and Continental films in the United States and Canada.

The company has already purchased six pictures and is negotiating for several others.

The company's capital is all-British and has been subscribed by one of the strongest financial groups in the City of London, Mr. Williams announced.

Jaydee Williams is managing director of the new company. He will come to America shortly, bringing the pictures already brought for distribution by United M. P. Producers, Ltd., and will be accompanied by Cecil Harrison, his former associate in British National.

The company will handle the product of the leading British and Continental producers for distribution here and in Canada.

This announcement by Mr. Williams is of great importance because it marks the definite determination to come into the American market with European pictures, under a plan directed by an outstanding executive in the international industry. His achievements in the American industry, as well as abroad, are of course, well known.

Cruze Tells New Plans

Hits Present Production Methods in Outlining Details of His Independent Cooperative Movement

JAMES CRUZE, noted as director of "The Covered Wagon," "Old Ironsides" and others of the big screen successes, in casting his lot with the independents, makes some caustic comment regarding production activities and the high costs attending them.

Cruze is launching a new organization which has as its basis an alliance with the exchange men connected with independent theatres throughout the country, and which will be conducted on a co-operative plan. According to the announcement, the exchange men, numbering about twenty-eight, who serve the independent theatres are to be Cruze's business associates and share with him in the profits.

Harry Sherman, who purchased the exhibition rights from D. W. Griffith on "The Birth of a Nation," is the man who induced Cruze to enter on this pioneering effort. As the result of their negotiations two new concerns have come into existence. They are James Cruze, Inc., the production end of the combination, which will be headed by Cruze as president, and a distributing organization to be known as Allied Distributors Corporation, over which Sherman will preside. The Cruze product and that of his four directors will be distributed to Allied at cost plus a small percentage of Allied's gross. Cruze, it is said, will accept a comparatively low salary, fixed in the agreement, with a promise not to raise that salary during the five-year life of the contract.

Discussing his plans, Cruze hit at present production along the following lines:

"Another evil in the studios is the politics which permit a director to cinch his own job by saying 'No' to any great creative thought of another man. He is willing and often able to wreck everybody else in order to keep his own job.

"Another thing. As things now stand in some of the big studios, if a producer gets it in for a director, he will charge the cost of other pictures on the films of the director he doesn't like.

"The picture business has been a little too fast for the people in it. They haven't yet got down to a sound basis."

"We aim to keep the cost of our pictures around $100,000, and we shall deliver the pictures at cost, plus a low percentage, and sending a sworn statement as to that cost to the distributors.

"We also promise there will be no high-priced so-called supervisors and no deadwood in the offices drawing tremendous salaries which they do not earn."

Northwest T. O. to Meet in May in Minneapolis

The Board of directors of the Northwest Theatre Owners Association will hold the next annual convention of the association May 1 and 2 in Minneapolis. It had previously been decided to hold the meeting on a boat between Duluth and Port Arthur, but it was found it would be well into the season before a suitable boat could be secured and suitable weather conditions be counted upon. There are so many important problems needing attention that it was thought best to call an early meeting.

President Steffes predicts the largest attendance in the history of the organization, as a drive will get under way immediately to bring in at least 500 theatre owners of the territory. A number of the officers of the organization are planning to make personal tours of the district to call on exhibitors and urge them to attend.

Quebec Establishing Board of Censors

Legislative arrangements have been made by the Provincial Government of Quebec for the establishment of a Provincial Board of Censors for all moving picture display posters to be used in any city or town of Quebec, the bill providing for this board having received its third reading in the Quebec House.

With the authorization of the Provincial poster censorship, the civic poster censors at Montreal, Quebec City and other centers automatically cease to exist. The Provincial Board will be distinct from the film censor board, but will work in co-operation with that bureau at Montreal.

The result is that all theatre posters, still photographs and advertising matter will be censored for the whole Province. This is the first poster censor board in any Canadian Province.

Merritt Crawford Titling and Editing Films

Merritt Crawford, who recently withdrew from the publicity and advertising activities to specialize on editing and titling, has just completed work on "Tracy, the Outlaw," a six-part drama of the life of this famous character based on the play by Pierce Kingsley. William Steiner holds the world right in the picture.

Crawford has begun editing "Shooting Stars," the Anthony Acquith film, produced by British Instructional Pictures. The American rights are held by Arthur Lee.

Crawford has several other foreign films, which he is revising and retitling for this market, which shortly will be announced.

RETURNING to Hollywood for a short stay preliminary to winding up his directorial affairs in London, England, Marshall Neilan paused long enough in New York City to emphatically declare that he wished to issue a warning to all Americans engaged in motion picture studio work to stay out of England at the present time unless they held an iron bound contract and advances on transportation both ways and other expenses. Neilan said that there are approximately 150 Hollywood actors and actresses practically marooned in London right now and further gave his opinion that the present "quota" law would end in being a complete "flop"; that there could never be any such thing as a "quota picture," the public being at all times the determining factor in a move of this nature.

MR. NEILAN is of the opinion that American pictures are too firmly intrenched with the British public to let an inferior grade of product be calmly thrust upon it. He cited the case of a recent W. C. Fields feature, chock full of Yankee slang, at which an English audience ''fairly howled their heads off.'' It was not so long ago, Neilan said, that the English could not understand slangy American subtitles, but that now they are as well understood as here in the United States.

Five years from now, Neilan thinks, conditions in English studios will be greatly improved and will permit a more amicable understanding between that country's picture executives and those of Hollywood but that at present the majority of the studios are hopelessly inadequate, being where ours were 15 years ago, only a few permitting more than three or four sets to be put in work at one time.

The plants of Herbert Wilcox and, also, Elstree, were mentioned as outstanding exceptions, both being well equipped and working along standardized lines.

Two pictures also claimed Neilan's attention—''Shooting Stars,'' a British Instructional Film made by Anthony Asquith, which he said was equal technically to any motion picture, and ''Dawn,'' which recently came in for front page publicity in the newspapers.

MR. NEILAN expressed the opinion that with the present number of stars in Hollywood not now under contract to the big American producers, the Independent producer has the opportunity of his lifetime. He also thinks that the Independent has given evidence (and such that it has excited interest on the part of our biggest executives) that good pictures can be turned out by them and far more cheaply. The case of Columbia's "Blood Ship" was cited, a picture that cost, he said, around $65,000 and brought in a gross of $600,000. Neilan's future plans will shortly be announced on his next return from London.

THE English press lately revealed two quite extraordinary instances, setting forth the ameliorative effect of the motion picture on the sordid side of life, firstly of London and secondly of Edinburgh. J. A. R. Cairns, a magistrate who presides over the police court in the meanest part of London lately, in an address in the wealthy west end of London, said:

''If it is the human story told in the human way, of virtue and goodness triumphing over vice and filth, that will make for good. I am certain the cinema is the greatest civilizing factor among us. Childhood is introduced into a world of harmonies and beauty, and adolescence and middle age have consolations and vistas of a bigger world than that of work and toil.''

Rodney Ross, the chief constable of Edinburgh, lately reported a remarkable diminution in the number of street offenses, basing the facts on an examination made by the Street Offences Committee. Mr. Ross said he ''did not hesitate to name the cinema as one of the chief contributory causes. Official witnesses stated that prosecutions had declined in Edinburgh from 419 in 1920 to 129 last year, and in Glasgow from 2,700 in 1902 to 283 last year. Well might Dr. Hensley Henson say, 'the diminution was very remarkable,' and clamoured for an explanation. There cannot be the slightest doubt in the minds of reasonable people that the cinemas are a purifying influence on the streets of any town.''

WELFORD BEATON, in his "Film Spectator," writes: "The other day I sat in a projection-room and viewed a picture that took three weeks to shoot and cost the stupendous sum of ninety-seven dollars. It is a one-reeler that was directed, photographed, and edited by Robert Florey, assistant to Henry King, and S. Vorkapich, the Serbian painter, both of whom had a hand in writing the story. Most of the photography was done with a De Vry camera, and the only light used was a three hundred-watt globe. A large number of sets were used, the most elaborate taking almost three hours to build. The materials used were cardboard, cigar boxes, and tin cans. Jules Raucourt and Voya Georges compose the cast and both give satisfactory performances. The picture gives a glimpse of the life of a motion picture extra in Hollywood and is exceedingly clever both in conception and execution."

The picture is entitled "The Clues—a Rhapsody of Hollywood." A music score has been written by Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld and the film will be shown in the United Artists theatres.

EX-GOVERNOR CARL E. MILLIKEN, secretary of the Hays organization, addressed 300 members of the Cleveland Federated Women's Club on March 21st. The greater part of his talk was devoted to an exposition of the Federal Trade meeting in New York and its findings, and to the Blind-Block Booking situation. After comparing blind and block booking to the purchase of a year's subscription to a magazine, Governor Milliken said that ''the exhibitor has the same privilege (as a magazine subscriber) of picking his product one by one if he wants to.''

''Block booking is the alibi of an exhibitor for a poor picture,,'' Gov. Milliken told his hearers. He did point out, however, that all magazine subscribers can get the magazine at the same time. For reasons, one exhibitor gets a picture ahead of another exhibitor. Competition sets in. And competition urges an exhibitor to buy a block of pictures so that his competitor shall not buy them. Following the formal meeting, Governor Milliken held an open forum for asking and answering questions of interest. Pictures for children were dealt with at length, with the conclusion that pictures must be selected for children, either by the parent or by the parent teachers' associations.

Mrs. Georgia Moffett, secretary of the Cleveland Film Board of Trade, was among the speakers. Mrs. Moffett told the members that 69 Cleveland institutions had received free motion picture programs through the Film Board of Trade.

June Collyer is a former society bud now blooming on the Fox lot. She was particularly fortunate this year as she was chosen a Wampas baby star, and cast for the principal feminine role in the Fox special, "Hangman's House." More choice assignments are on the way

"Lordy, that's just the part for me," says George Bancroft to Rena Vale, who had him in mind when she wrote "Swag," the winning story in the Paramount-Photoplay Magazine idea contest. Rena is a Los Angeles girl

Louis Wolheim rivals John Barrymore when it comes to a question of profiles. His rugged countenance will be seen opposite the handsome John's in "Tempest," the United Artists picture. Besides being an excellent heavy, Wolheim is a comedian of talent, as witness his "Two Arabian Knights"

In the Columbia production, "Broadway Daddies," Jacqueline Logan is seen as a cabaret dancer and jazz baby

Just before starting actual shooting a motion picture comedy troupe take their ease. This little force of Educational workers on location consists of George Davis, the comedian, and Muriel Evans (standing up and facing the camera) and Stephen Roberts, the director, and John Lockert, gagman sprawled in the camp chair

La Jana, European dancer, and Betty Bird lend their feminine charm to the scenes of "My Girl's in Paris," a new Defu First National production. La Jana is the star and Miss Bird, a Viennese discovery of Ray Rockett, one of the featured players

John G. Adolphi, director, and Raymond Schrock, writer, talk over the possibilities of a new story by the former which will be produced by Tiffany-Stahl. The director is scheduled to direct a story by Jack London which will have the title of "Prowlers of the Sea"

Little Eddie Quillan and Lina Basquette and (of all things!) a love thermometer. Eddie's pulse has quickened so much because of Lina's ravishing smiles that it has skyrocketed to the smoking point. The two of them are in Pathe's "The Godless Girl"

Hays to Handle French Crisis

M. P. P. D. A. Head Sails for Paris to Negotiate with French Government Commission on Recent Film Decree

WILL H. HAYS sailed March 24 on the Leviathan for Paris to handle for the American industry the serious situation brought about by the recent Government decree which would compel American film firms to buy one French film for every four American pictures distributed in France.

At a meeting of the members of the Hays organization and foreign managers of the member companies on the preceding day it was decided that immediate action was necessary.

Before sailing, Mr. Hays said he regarded the French situation as a difficult problem, and that the State Department was assisting in the effort to solve it.

Before sailing, Mr. Hays communicated with Senator Nye, chairman of the Public Lands Committee of the Senate. Senator Nye declared that there was no objection to Mr. Hays' trip to France, provided he was not gone more than four or five weeks, or would hold himself in readiness to return after a month's absence if the Committee desired to question him further.

Chairman Nye also thanked Mr. Hays for the co-operation he has given the committee.

At the pier to see Mr. Hays off were several prominent producers, including Adolp Zukor, Harry M. Warner, C. B. Howley, J. Robert Rubin, the foreign managers.

The report from Paris that the American industry would refuse to do business in France unless the restrictions were modified was said, in some quarters, to be "too strong." It was said that the American action would be decided after Mr. Hays had negotiated with the French Cinema Commission.

Under the present terms of the restrictions, only five hundred pictures would be admitted to France and her colonies from March 1, this year, to September 30, 1929. The Commission has the authority to change this figure in its discretion, however.

Broad powers of censorship are also given the Commission, which can revoke the license of any person, producer or distributor which shall have produced, distributed or exhibited outside France any film regarded as reflecting unfavorably on France.

The New York Times printed a special copyrighted cable in its issue of March 25 which read in part:

"According to a reliable report, the big American companies are seriously considering the advice of those in close touch with the French situation, to boycott the market until matters have clarified sufficiently to permit normal trade.

"A boycott would cost the Americans a considerable sum of money, but it probably would prove much more serious for the French cinema owners. As soon as the present stock of approved American films was exhausted the exhibitors would find themselves in a position where they would not have half enough films to complete their programs. Wholesale closings might be necessary.

"However, before the problem is permitted to become so complicated, it is believed the French will be willing to modify their new rules. If the rules are put into effect, the American film interests will be forced to purchase more than half of all French pictures made each year in order to obtain the necessary number of Government visas for American pictures. It is estimated that this would cost the Americans between $800,000 and $1,000,000, an amount approximately equal to the net profit taken in this market each year by American concerns.

"The American State Department is closely watching developments, and unless concessions are forthcoming the American Government may see fit to make an unofficial protest on the grounds that the French motion picture regulations violate the Geneva convention against trade barriers to which France and the United States are signatories."

News Reel Propaganda Denied

Hays Answers Charges by Rembusch; Official Statement Also Issued by Gov. Milliken for Organization

CHARGES by Frank J. Rembusch that news reels were being used by Will H. Hays to aid the presidential aspirations of Herbert Hoover were denied by Mr. Hays prior to sailing for France March 24. A denial of the charges was also made in a formal statement by Carl E. Milliken, secretary of the Hays organization.

Mr. Hays was asked about the Rembusch charges by the ship news reporters of the New York newspapers and declared: "In the first place, the charges aren't true, and in the second place they couldn't be true, as is well known to these gentlemen here."

He referred to more than a dozen film executives who were at the pier and they agreed with his statement.

Following is the statement issued by Gov. Milliken:

"Statements appearing in today's newspapers to the effect that the news reels are being used for political propaganda in behalf of any individual, party, or institution are not based upon the facts.

"The news reels are the press services of the motion picture industry. They have not and cannot be used by anyone for propaganda or advertising purposes. It is a well recognized fact within the industry that the news reels to be successful must be absolutely impartial and this policy has been followed and is followed by the news reel editors. The statement has likewise been quoted as coming from an Indiana exhibitor that the exhibitors are not allowed 'under our contract to cut out parts of the films.' The fact is that it has long been a recognized custom for the exhibitors to eliminate any parts of the news reels which they did not desire to show. Many theatres examine the news reels produced by all the leading news reel companies and select what they think is best, just as a newspaper selects its news from various press associations and correpondents. This custom has been recognized for so long within the industry that when the new standard contract was agreed upon by producers and exhibitors in Chicago in February of this year, it was specifically provided in article twelve that 'the exhibitor agrees to run photoplays (excepting news reels) as delivered without alterations.' Therefore the reported Indiana statement is fundamentally inaccurate.

"Furthermore, the news reels of the six leading companies during the last six months of 1927 alone, which is the latest available record, featured Governor Alfred E. Smith and Mayor James J. Walker upon seventy-nine different occasions.

"As the millions of persons who see the news reels twice each week in the thousands of motion picture theatres will recall all of the presidential candidates, including Vice President Charles G. Dawes, Secretary Hoover, Governor Lowden, Governor Ritchie, Senators Watson, Willis, Walsh and others, have appeared on the screen and no partiality has been shown to anyone."

The Rembusch charges were contained in a letter to Senator Brookhart, in which he asked the latter for a Senatorial investigation of the picture business. Mr. Rembusch also sent a letter to Senator Watson, of Indiana, charging use of the newsreels for political propaganda.

The letter to Senator Brookhart said in part:

"We now find more boldly every day our screens being surreptitiously used for political purposes. Last year the news reels under the Hays control had an unusual amount of showing of President Coolidge. A few months ago Mr. Hoover was brought out and fifteen millions of people are having a look at Mr. Hoover. It is neither practical nor are we allowed under our contract to cut out parts of our film.

"We now can easily see where the ramifications extend. Mr. Hays is boosting Mr. Hoover. . . . What chance has either Senators Watson, Willis, Walsh or Gover-

New Minnesota Opened

Notables Attend Initial Performance At Largest and Finest Minneapolis Picture Palace

MINNEAPOLIS witnessed the opening of its largest and finest theatre last Friday night when the Minnesota, the new $2,000,000 Publix-Finkelstein & Ruben theatre, opened its doors. The initial performance was an invitation affair, but Saturday morning the theatre was thrown open to the general public.

Friday night saw a brilliant turnout of society to the new theatre. The affair was formal, and the theatre, which seats 4,050, was filled almost to capacity. Mayor George E. Leach of Minneapolis gave the dedicatory address, while a number of local celebrities occupied the stage with him. Sumner T. McKnight, president of the Minneapolis Theatre corporation, was the only other speaker. Film notables who attended the invitation performance included Sam Katz, president of the Publix theatre corporation; Morris Katz, vice president of Balaban & Katz, Sam Dembow, vice president of Publix theatres and Eugene Zukor, vice president of Famous Players Lasky corporation. Other notables included Barney Balaban, Mr. and Mrs. Max Balaban, A. H. Blank, Robert Lieber, former president of First National Pictures, Spyros Skouras, St. Louis theatre magnate, and Frank Cambira, producer of "Treasure Ships," the Publix unit show which was on the first program at the Minnesota.

In addition to "Treasure Ships," the program included Richard Dix in "Sporting Goods," and "Plymouth Rock," an operatic spectacle under the direction of Oscar F. Baum, guest orchestra conductor, who was formerly at the Capitol theatre in St. Paul. Eddie Dundstedter, popular State organist, was at the console of the Minnesota's organ, and will remain there for a few weeks. He offered the novelty "Organs I Have Played."

The grand opening of the theatre on Saturday was preceded by a parade through the loop district. All day long the theatre was crowded with thousands of eager Minneapolitans who had waited almost a year for the opportunity to glimpse this magnificent showhouse.

The Minnesota theatre is the fifth largest in the United States. Its seating capacity is excelled only by the Roxy and the Paramount in New York, the Uptown in Chicago and the Michigan in Detroit.

The Minnesota is located at Ninth Street and La Salle Avenue, two blocks from the State theatre, up to this time Minneapolis' biggest movie house, and about a block from the Hennepin-Orpheum, Minneapolis' largest vaudeville house. It is a massive structure of brick and buff terra cotta, and its canopy is the largest in the northwest. It has a towering sign nearly 100 feet high.

Topeka Has Novel Way of Evading Blue Law

WHILE the Midland theatre, Kansas City's largest house, seating 4,000, was reducing its admission price from 60 cents to 50 cents this week, theatre owners of Topeka, Kas., were successfully combating a blue law code of ancient standing.

Kansas blue laws provide that benefits only, at which no admission can be charged, can be staged on Sundays. Therefore, the exhibitors, with the exception of the Grand and Jayhawk theatres, have esablished what is known as "silver offering" performances on Sunday. The patrons make their offering at the box office and receive a ticket which passes them through the door. The Princess, Cozy, Orpheum and Gem theatres successfully have been operating under that policy several months. This week the Novelty theatre joined the group which remains open on Sundays. There is no law on the state statutes under which the showmen can be prosecuted as long as no established admission price is charged.

Loew Seeking Site for New Cincinnati House

Although those with a flair for statistics shake their heads negatively as they contend that Cincinnati is suffering from a condition of overseating, it has come to light that the Loew interests are now attempting to make greater Cincinnati greater by establishing a house in the Queen City. Representatives from the Loew offices, who were in the city recently in search of a desirable location for a picture house, inspected Taft Auditorium in the newly-completed Masonic Temple, and, according to reports, were greatly impressed with the possibilities of the place. However, it appears that they are more desirous of becoming established in close proximity to Fountain Square, which is the very heart of the business district, and, incidentally, very close to the new Albee Theatre.

One report now in circulation is to the effect that A. L. Erlanger is contemplating leasing his Grand Opera House to Loew's, and will, in turn, lease Taft Auditorium for the legitimate attractions which are now playing the Opera House. As far as is known, no ddfinite action has as yet been taken.

Famous Canadian Starting New Ottawa Theatre

Official announcement has been made by Clarence Robson, Toronto, Eastern Division manager of Famous Players Canadian Corp., that the company is making an immediate start on the erection of a magnificent moving picture theatre in Ottawa, Ontario. The theatre, which will be known as the Capitol Theatre, will cost $1,225,000. There will be 2,500 seats and the interior of the house will embody the atmospheric treatment of decoration. The new Capitol is to be opened January 1, 1929.

The site already purchased for the new Ottawa house takes in seven stores on Sparks Street, and the tenants of all stores and offices are vacating within the next few weeks. Coincident with the announcement from Famous Players comes the announcement from the owners of the Russell Theatre, Ottawa, a 1,700-seat house, which has been in operation for many years, that the Russell will close its doors forever on April 14, the building having been expropriated by the Canadian Government for a park scheme.

Mrs. Pickford Dies After Lingering Illness

Mrs. Charlotte Pickford, mother of Mary, Lottie and Jack Pickford, died at her home in Beverley Hills, March 21st, after having suffered for three years from a lingering illness. Present at her bedside at the end were all the members of her family. She is survived by a sister, Elizabeth Ryder; a granddaughter, Rosemary Pickford; two nieces, Mabel Benson (whose husband F. E. Benson is manager of the U. A. exchange in Los Angeles), and Verna Chalif, in addition to her three children.

Production activity of the Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks units have been suspended temporarily owing to the death. As a special meeting on March 23rd the board of directors of United Artists Corporation passed resolutions of condolence on the death of Miss Pickford's parent.

J. J. Cassady, Pioneer in Motion Pictures, Dead

James J. Cassady, former executive connected with the Motion Picture branch of Actors' Equity, a popular actor on the speaking stage and a pioneer in the motion picture industry, died in Spokane last week. Cassady joined the old Lubin Stock Company and has appeared in prominent support of many of the best known stars of the screen. He went into vaudeville when the Paramount Studio on Long Island closed, and at the time of his death was appearing in an act with Kerr & Weston. Funeral services were held on March 28th in New York.

Mechanical Device to Be Used by Brown in Studio

Instead of listening to a small orchestra, film players seeking incentive for their emotions in music will in the near future be listening to a new machine, the Cinephone, if the plan of Clarence Brown, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer director, is realized. By the use of this device phonograph records, electrically recorded, are played and rebroadcasted through loud speakers; the volume of a full orchestra may be obtained, it is claimed.

Hays Denies News Reel Propaganda

nor Smith to become the idol of the movie fans when the screens of America are under the control of the Czar Hays?

"Certainly, Senator Brookhart, you are right in saying the motion picture industry needs a Senatorial investigation. The hearing before the Interstate Commerce Committee was just a glimpse of what is going on."

Seattle Exhibitor Is Elected Mayor

FRANK EDWARDS, exhibitor, of Seattle, Washington, last week was elected mayor of that city for the two-year term to begin this June. The election, according to reports from the Pacific Northwest city, brought out a new record vote of more than 100,000 persons. Mrs. Bertha K. Landes, winner in the primaries, was defeated by Mr. Edwards by a majority of almost 20,000.

Mr. Edwards has not been active in the picture field for the last year or more since he disposed of his downtown Winter Garden Theatre and a string of ten suburban theatres to Universal.

New Film Firms Chartered at Albany, New York

Motion pictures chartered by the secretary of state at Albany, during the past week, and entering the business in New York state, included the following: Rudman Amusement Corporation, Mt. Vernon, capitalization not stated, Max Rudnick, Manny and Sol Feinberg, Brooklyn; Lincoln National Enterprises Incorporated, $10,000, Everett C. and Mildred V. Conspiracy Charged In Chicago Strike

Department of Justice Charges Restraint of Trade Against Eleven Companies and Exhibitor Body

IT is announced by the Department of Justice that in March, 1928, an information was filed in the District Court of the United States for the Eastern Division of the Northern District of Illinois against eleven defendant corporations: Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Distributing Corporation, Paramount Famous Lasky Corporation, First National Pictures, Inc., Universal Film Exchanges, Inc., United Artists Corporation, Fox Film Corporation, Pathe Exchange, Inc., F B O Pictures Corporation, Vitagraph, Inc., Columbia Pictures Corporation, and Renown Pictures, Inc., and against twelve individuals, each of whom was the manager of the Chicago exchange of one of the defendant corporations during August and September, 1927.

The information also named as defendants the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of Chicago, Inc., which has a membership of approximately 175 individuals, copartnerships and corporations engaged in the business of operating motion picture theatres in Chicago, and together operating approximately 300 motion picture theatres in that city, or approximately 80 per cent of all the motion picture theatres in Chicago, E. D. Miller and Edwin Silverman, respectively the president and the secretary of the Exhibitors' Association.

The information alleges that about August 29, 1927, a labor dispute arose in Chicago between the Orpheum Circuit, Inc., a member of the defendant Exhibitors' Association, and the Motion Picture Operators' Union, and that the Union called a strike against all the theatres operated by the Orpheum Circuit. On the same date, August 29, 1927, the Exhibitors' Association and its members agreed to close all their motion picture theatres in Chicago and to institute a lockout for the duration of the labor dispute against all members of the Union employed in said motion picture theatres. The information then alleges that the defendant Exhibitors' Association and its members, for the purpose of making effective their lockout of union employees, agreed to induce and to compel the closing of each and every motion picture theatre in Chicago whether operated by a member or non-member of the Exhibitors' Association, and that on August 30, 1927, the defendant exchange managers, acting within the scope of their authority from the defendant distributors, entered into an understanding and agreement with the Exhibitors' Association in accordance with which they refused to release, transport, supply, and deliver motion picture films to any and all motion picture theatres in Chicago in accordance with pre-existing contracts therefor, and to make new contracts to supply, transport and deliver motion picture films to such motion picture theatres during the period of the duration of the lockout, which lasted from August 29, 1927, to September 5, 1927. The information alleges that the agreement to refuse to deliver motion picture films and to refuse to contract to deliver such films constituted a conspiracy in restraint of interstate trade and commerce in motion picture films carried on by the defendant distributors, and that the defendant distributing corporations are responsible for the acts of their agents and employees in entering into that agreement.

Alfred S. Austrian, Counsel for the motion picture distributing companies, and Weymouth Kirkland for the Chicago Theatre Owners Association, named as defendants in an action brought by the Government in the United States District Court for the Northern District of Chicago charging a violation of the Sherman Act, said that the action is based upon the alleged acts of practically all of the theatre owners in Chicago and of the Chicago Branch Managers of the distributing companies during the recent motion picture theatre operators' strike in Chicago; but that the public interest was in no way involved or affected, and that in their opinion the alleged acts were not in violation of the Sherman Act. Whatever action these Branch Managers are alleged to have taken was entirely without knowledge of the Home Offices of the distributing companies in New York City.

Rumored Deal Between Chicago Firms Denied

PUBLISHED reports that Balaban & Katz had closed a deal with Marks Brothers, whereby they secured control of their Granada and Marbro Theatres, Chicago, have been denied by the interested parties, who declare that no such deal has been consummated. Fires Harm Two Theatres in Albany District

Two more theatres in the Albany, N. Y., district were the scenes of fire last week. A fire in the projection booth at the Eagle theatre in Albany, N. Y., resulted in an estimated damage of $2,500. Miss Marie Ruff, the organist at the theatre, used her head and herded about 100 children, who were seated in the front rows, to an exit, aided by an usher. The fire was partly extinguished by the operator, who was finally driven from the booth, however, with face and arms burned.

About $15,000 damage was done to the Strand in Amsterdam by a blaze that originated from an unknown cause. Every piece of fire fighting apparatus in the city was summoned to the theatre building. It took the firemen more than two hours before the blaze could be extinguished.

Radio-Victor Combine to Produce Talking Pictures

THE deal now reported to be under way by which the Radio Corporation of America will acquire the Victor Talking Machine Company would bring about the biggest combine so far recorded for the production of talking pictures. When the Radio Corporation secures control of Victor it will permit the former to produce talking pictures through F B O, using Victor artists on an extensive scale. The Radio-Victor deal was first rumored in Wall street as being responsible for the tremendous rise in Victor Talking Machine stock.

Expulsion From Board Is Carried to Court

Atlanta Distributor Charges Film Board of Trade Acted Against Rules Governing Action

THOMAS A. BRANON, doing business as Eltabran Film Company, has filed a petition in Fulton Superior Court at Atlanta asking that the Atlanta Film Board of Trade be enjoined from carrying out its action in expelling him and that he be declared a member in good standing of the board. A temporary restraining order was signed by Judge Virlyn B. Moore, who set a hearing in the case for April 14th. His expulsion came on a charge of extending service to certain theatres on the board's blacklist.

Branon contends that his application for membership on September 30, 1926 was not acted upon until September 26, 1927, when he was admitted to membership on the board. At the time of his admission he says many of his customers were on the blacklist of the board for having failed to comply with awards rendered against them by the arbitration committee of the board, and he was required to write letters to each of his customers on this list demanding deposits. He declares he sent these letters under protest and that in each case the deposit was refused by the customer and the contract and service was therefor terminated. He claims that the requirements for deposits should not apply to exhibitors with whom he had contracts antedating his membership.

On December 5th last, Branon says that he was notified by the board's secretary that charges of violation of the arbitration rules had been brought against him in that he was still serving the accounts and had failed to send out deposit letters to them.

December 19th, he says the board passed a resolution imposing a fine of $50 on him for violation of the rules of the arbitration, the fine being subject to approval of the New York office of the board. The fine, he says, was not thus approved, and he, under protest, discontinued services to the theatres about which complaint has been made, with the exception of one, which he continued to serve, claiming that another member of the board was serving the same theatre on alternate weeks without objection from the board.

On January 30th of this year, Branon says the board voted to expel him, which, he contends, was contrary to the rules, which provide a $50 fine for a first offense, $100 for a second and expulsion for a third. He contends he was not subject to any fine except the one of $50, which was not approved by the New York office.

In his petition to the court Branon asks that the resolution for his expulsion be declared null and void and that the board be enjoined from circulating reports that he has been expelled. He also asks that the arbitration committee be restrained from discriminating against him in the matter of hearing his claims now listed for arbitration.

Cleveland Bans Films On First Run Protection

Exhibitors Pledge Boycott on Any Service Giving 56 Days as Part of Conditions

CLEVELAND motion picture exhibitors are up in arms over the 56 day protection granted first run theatres and have given their pledge not to buy any service for the coming season until more equitable protection terms have been arranged.

At a regular meeting of the Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors Association last Thursday, it was the unanimous opinion of the members present, representing 85 theatres, "that this long and unfair protection has played havoc with the receipts at the box office of the subsequent run theatres." George W. Erdmann, business manager of the association, made a survey of the following Cities: New York, Chicago, Philadelphia, Detroit, Baltimore, Pittsburgh, Buffalo, Minneapolis, St. Louis, Newark, Des Moines, New Haven and Columbus, and in not one instance, he said, was it discovered that there is so long protection given to the first runs as is given in Cleveland.

A committee of five members was appointed to effect some remedy. This is a matter which cannot be adjusted through the Film Board of Trade, because it does not affect all companies. All companies are not giving 56 days' protection. All first runs are not demanding 56 days' protection. All of the Keith houses are asking and getting 29 days' protection. Therefore the companies serving the Keith houses are not involved in the controversy. The exhibitor committee will approach each exchange individually for a reduction of first run protection privileges.

A letter, setting forth the condition of protection, the evils of this long protection period, and the hardship of it, has been sent to every exchange manager in the city as well as to the sales managers of the companies concerned.

Inasmuch as the first and second run situation, with Keith as the sole exception, is controlled by Loew's, all pictures played by the Loew houses are not available for subsequent distribution in Cleveland until the 57th day following the first run.

Cleveland exhibitors not only protest against the excessive period of protection as such, but further protest that even when the Loew houses have finished their run before the expiration of the 56 days, the pictures still are unavailable until the 57th day. As proof they cite the example of "The Noose," which played at Allen the week of Jan. 29, the Park the week of Feb. 5, the Doan and Liberty the week ending March 17, and which is not available for any other theatre until April 8.

De Mille Studios Working on Four New Features

"The Godless Girl," "The Cop," "Man-Made Woman" and "Tenth Avenue" are four feature productions nearing the finis line at the De Mille studios. The first, being personally directed by De Mille, is now on the last lap and will probably be completed inside of two weeks. One of the latest scenes of this picture taken showed the destruction of the girls' wing of a reformatory by fire, which scene was finished within five nights.

The climactic sequences of "The Cop" wherein a bank is robbed, have been finished by Director Donald Crisp. "Man-Made Woman" was really finished last St. Patrick's Day, Director Paul Stein having shot the picture in 22 days. William De Mille has but a few scenes to go on "Tenth Avenue," which deals with "Hell's Kitchen" in New York City.

Finkelstein Denies Fox Deal for F. & R. Near Closing

IT is rumored but denied by M. L. Finkelstein that Fox will close a deal and take over Northwest Theatres of Finkelstein & Ruben within the next few days. Conferences were held last week at which were present William Hamm, I. H. Ruben, M. L. Finkelstein and Herbert Charles, the latter as attorney for Finkelstein & Ruben.

It is said that as a result of these conferences, which came out of negotiations entered into several weeks ago, a point was reached where only the signing of the contracts remained for Fox to take over the circuit. In Minneapolis, however, Mr. Finkelstein gave out the information that the status of the deal was the same as it has been for some time, with negotiations still under way.

DeMille Confab Still On

Producer Said to Be Set With United Artists Under Contract to Make Two Yearly

WHILE no announcement of Cecil B. De Mille's forthcoming plans has been made, the general impression is that he will shortly sign a contract to produce under the United Artists' banner. Conferences between De Mille and Joseph P. Kennedy, out of which it is expected a settlement of some kind will be reached, have been held regularly for the past week or so, and are still continuing.

Word from the west coast is to the effect that De Mille is now making his last picture under his present contract with Pathe and that the latter company has agreed to a settlement of the De Mille contract, which still has about two years to run. Just what the terms of this settlement are is not known, but it has been reported that De Mille was demanding $1,000,000.

It is reported that when De Mille goes to United Artists it will be under contract to make two pictures yearly. It is also said the producer will take with him William Boyd, Phyllis Haver, Rod la Rocque and executives who have been with him a year or more, and that he will not renew his option on the De Mille studio property, which is located at Culver City. Contracts on stars and directors are beginning to expire and are not being renewed, with Pathe said to be making deals directly with some of the workers on the De Mille lot.

It is said that with the current pictures now in the final stages of production the De Mille studios are planning for a shutdown, which will come undoubtedly as soon as he has concluded his conferences with Mr. Kennedy, who is on the coast reorganizing the Pathe forces and putting into effect some production economies that will materially reduce the company's tremendous overhead.

Vitaphone for All Films

Warner Bros. Announce Entire Program for New Season Will Have Sound Accompaniment

WARNER BROS. are to make their entire program of special productions and feature pictures for the coming season with Vitaphone sound accompaniment, according to announcement from the home office of the company. The policy, however, will carry the same proviso that has gone with the production of Vitaphoned pictures before, that every picture will be made available with or without the sound records and will be produced in a manner that will make them as suitable to the exhibitor not yet equipped with Vitaphone as to the one already employing the invention in his theatre.

Warners first tried the Vitaphone sound with pictures in “The Jazz Singer,” in which Al Jolson sang a song. The Vitaphoned dialogue is now available with three other films ready for immediate release throughout the country. They are, “Tenderloin,” “The Lion and the Mouse” and “Glorious Betsy.”

“Tenderloin” had its premiere recently at the Warner Theatre in New York. Dolores Costello is the star, supported by Conrad Nagel, Mitchell Lewis, Dan Wolheim and Georgie Stone. In “The Lion and the Mouse,” new and heretofore untried effects are announced. May McAvoy and Lionel Barrymore have the stellar roles in this picture. Dolores Costello is also the star of “Glorious Betsy,” which brings the Vitaphone into active play through sequences in which both conversation and songs figure.

Al Jolson will arrive in California the latter part of April to prepare for his next film appearance as a Warner Bros. star. The picture, as yet untitled, it is said, will use even more elaborate Vitaphone effects than were employed in “The Jazz Singer.”

MacLean Will Star in Christie Features

AL CHRISTIE has secured the signature of Douglas MacLean to a contract whereby the latter will star in two feature productions to be made at the Christie plant in Hollywood for release through Paramount. The deal was negotiated by George W. Weeks, general Paramount-Christie representative.

In his two vehicles MacLean will be surrounded with supporting players, writers and directors from the Christie staff, as well as outside talent. Several stories and plays are now under consideration, and the titles will have been selected by the time the complete season program is announced about the first of May.

Laura La Plante to Star in “The Last Warning”

Laura La Plante will star in “The Last Warning,” which will be Paul Leni's next production for Universal. Alfred A. Cohn is now preparing the adaptation. The play was written by Thomas F. Fallon from the book “The House of Fear,” by Charles Wadsworth Camp.

The latest Fox productions completed are: "The Red Dancer of Moscow," "Hangman's House," and "The Thief in the Dark."

Sunday Shows Win Out in Two New York Towns

Sunday movies are gaining slowly but surely in northern New York, as was evident from the results of elections held in two northern New York villages last week. In Norwood, Sunday movies won out by a vote of 309 to 286 after one of the most exciting campaigns ever conducted in the village. In Port Henry, Sunday movies was carried last week by a vote of 221 to 152, with the result that the first Sunday evening show in that village will take place on Easter Sunday. In both places exhibitors worked hard to bring about the desired results.

Quebec Bill Will Ban All Children Under 16 From Movies

LEGISLATION prohibiting the admission of all children under 16 years of age from all moving picture theatres of the Province of Quebec, whether with adults or not, was given its third reading in the Provincial Legislature at Quebec City on March 23 and the new law will go into effect following the adjournment of the Assembly within a few weeks.

The bill, as sponsored by Premier L. A. Taschereau, allows children to see moving pictures in educational institutions when they are students thereof but under no circumstances can they be admitted to a cinema within the Province of Quebec. A great many theatres in Montreal, Quebec City, Sherbrooke, Three Rivers, Hull, St. Johns, Valleyfield, Gatineau, Aylmer and other cities are affected by the drastic law.

The measure was adopted in the Quebec Legislature practically without opposition, the vote being 57 to 5 in favor of the bill. T. D. Bouchard, member for St. Hyacinthe, made an attack upon the proposal in behalf of the theatre owners. Mr. Bouchard is the proprietor of a moving picture theatre himself. One of his chief arguments was that a mother herself could no longer go to a theatre because she could not take the children with her.

Several members of the Legislature also asked for a film quota law for the Province of Quebec whereby the presentation of United States pictures would be restricted. Film censorship was also discussed.

Shipping Stations Due

Distributors Will Eliminate Several Exchanges in Economy Plan; Albany, Buffalo to Stay

THE announcement last week of the plan by which distributors may eliminate a number of present comparatively inactive exchanges in different cities and towns and substitute joint shipping stations through which they will all ship, has aroused considerable comment and caused much consternation in those cities likely to be affected.

The idea is to have the shipping stations handle physical distribution for all companies, the cost to be prorated by all participating. Among the cities mentioned for such substitution were Butte, Montana; Sioux Falls, Portland, Maine, and New Haven. While it is definitely decided that certain eliminations of exchange cities will be made, the definite working details of the shipping stations have not yet been mapped out. Conferences among the leading distributors on these economy plans are said still to be continuing.

Among the cities which it is said were suggested for elimination were Buffalo and Albany, with sales and collections to be handled through Syracuse. The opposition to these eliminations on the part of several of the national releasing organizations resulted in the suggestion being tabled almost immediately.

Speculation is rife in New Haven as to the extent to which closing of exchange points may be carried and distribution stations substituted. A majority of the companies having exchanges in Boston also maintain exchanges in New Haven. Officials point out that Connecticut is the only state in the New England group not covered by the Boston exchanges, although salesmen travel close to the Connecticut border and frequently cut across the state to reach other parts of their territories.

It appears to be the opinion in Boston that if New Haven is to be discontinued as a distributing point, Boston exchanges will handle the territory as far as either Hartford or New Haven as well as territory east of either of these cities, while New York would handle the western part of the state.

Will Withdraw Films After 2 Years' Playing

Delegations from Dallas, New Orleans, Oklahoma City, Memphis, St. Louis, Kansas City, Chicago, Milwaukee, Minneapolis, Omaha, Des Moines, Winnipeg and Calgary will gather in Kansas City. Branches which will be represented at the San Francisco convention include all the Far Western offices.

A delegation from the Home Office and from the studios at Burbank, Calif., will be in attendance at each convention. The Home Office delegation, in addition to Ned E. Depinet and his sales lieutenants, will include Clifford B. Hawley, president, and Richard A. Rowland, general and production manager.

Only One Bill Passed Albany Legislature

Motion picture legislation fared poorly in the New York State Legislature this year. Only one bill of any interest to the exhibitor or to the industry, managed to squeeze through and that bill has already been signed by Governor Alfred E. Smith, and is a law. The bill, known as the Dick measure, amends the education law of New York State as it relates to permits issued for the exhibition of pictures. Censorship is now under the direction of the department of education, which makes it necessary to amend the education law.

The rebuff given the censorship repeal bill a week ago, when it was defeated in the assembly, was so discouraging to its supporters that no attempt was made during the closing hours of the session to bring the bill to a vote in the Senate. The Freiberg bill relating to the admission of unaccompanied children to motion picture theatres, and other bills, all went down to defeat during the closing hours of the session, through failure to being reported out of committee.

Vancouver Won January Drive of First National

J. E. Archer, manager of First National's branch office at Vancouver, won the trophy offered by Richard A. Rowland, general and production manager of the company, for the best sales record against quota during January, which is, by custom, First National Month each year.

As his branch finished in first place, Mr. Archer will receive the Rowland trophy and a trip to New York. It was originally planned that Mr. Rowland would present the trophy to the winning manager at the home office, but in view of the forthcoming convention at Atlantic City, the plans have been changed. Mr. Archer will also be taken to Atlantic City, where the trophy will be presented to him with ceremony.

Bandits Kill Philly Theatre Man in Attempted Robbery

One of the most daring holdups staged in Philadelphia in recent years took place at the Cross Keys Theatre, 60th and Market Streets, on March 23, when three bandits shot down and killed Max T. Harrison, assistant manager of the theatre, and critically wounded Martha Yetter, a seventeen year-old girl.

The dead man was 26 years old, married, and had been employed at the Cross Keys Theatre three years.

As Harrison, carrying a bag containing the night's receipts, about $700, stepped from the cashier's cage at 10.30 P. M., two men who had been standing in front of the theatre stepped up to him, ignoring the presence of an armed policeman who had been detailed to guard him. One of the robbers reached for the bag containing the money, while the other pressed a pistol against Harrison's side. Harrison knocked the gun aside, drew his pistol and threw the bag containing the money in back of him. The bandit fired twice, and in the confusion the bandits fled without the money.

Sound Device in "Wings"

General Electric Company Synchronization Machine Provides Airplane, Machine Gun Effects

THE realistic airplane noises and machine gun sounds used in connection with the showing of "Wings" at the Criterion Theatre in New York are not the result of back-stage effects, but are a part of the picture itself, it is revealed after the picture has been on display for nine months at this house.

These unusual airplane noises and the perfectly synchronized machine gun fire emanate from a new system of film sound invention similar to those that have gone before, but made along different lines by the General Electric Company at their Schenectady plant. The sounds come from another film which runs parallel to the one showing the picture.

While most films have one or two operators at the most, in the booth while the images are being thrown upon the screen, there are four experts in the booth at the Criterion when the airplanes are soaring in "Wings," and with them at all times is an electrical engineer from the General Electric plant whose job is to supervise the sound effects. If anything went wrong with the intricate machine, he alone could repair it.

In addition to the staff required in the projection booth, it is claimed that there are a dozen men employed backstage at the Criterion to manipulate certain other effects, such as heavy bomb or shell explosions; for operating four thunder drums used in battle scenes and for machines that make noises as of crashing wood. It is contended, however, that it would be impossible for a man to fire the machine gun sounds and keep pace with the fast-moving film scenes, hence the necessity for the synchronization by the General Electric Company device.

On April 9th, "Wings" will be on view concurrently in eight different cities, New York, Philadelphia, where it has played eighteen weeks, Los Angeles, where it has been on for ten weeks, San Francisco, Cleveland, Detroit, Pittsburgh and Atlantic City.

"Laugh Recorder" Try Out in Los Angeles

A DEVICE of much interest to the manufacturers of comedies—the "laugh recorder," an invention of Freeman Lang—was given a try out for the first time at a recent pre-view of a two-reel Educational comedy at the Western Theatre in Los Angeles.

The device automatically records the laughs of a theatre audience seeing a picture. The apparatus consists of a radio broadcasting studio microphone to which is attached an amplying device, the output of which is fed into a mechanism which transfers it to a phonograph record. The speed of the recording machines can be synchronized with the speed of the projection machine, which permits the reproduction of the laughter at the correct time when the motion picture is later projected in the exhibition rooms at the studio.

Rail Excursion to Show of "The Jazz Singer"

Korach's Tie-up With Railroad Results in Special Rate Offer to Out of Town Theatregoers

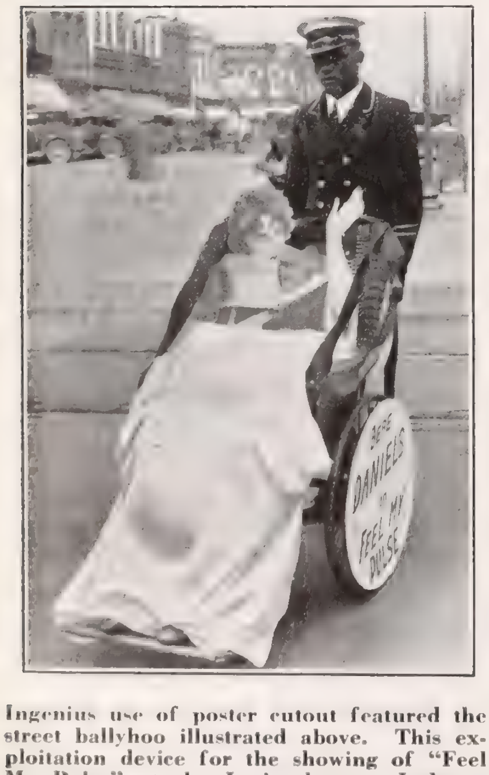
ONE of the most practical and effective theatre tie-ups arranged for a feature picture in Omaha was developed by Milton Korach, manager of the Rialto theatre in that city, in cooperation with the Union Pacific Railroad as a business builder for Korach's presentation of "The Jazz Singer."

The picture was being presented with Vitaphone accompaniment, and Korach sold the railroad officials the idea of running excursions from 120 neighboring towns into Omaha so that those living at a distance might have an opportunity to view the film with its Vitaphone score.

As an illustration of the extraordinary efforts put forth by the rail company to cooperate with the theatre, the Union Pacific offered the public the attractive inducement of reducing the regular round trip fare from one town from $10.20 to $3.00. Proportionate reductions of the excursion rate were made for the benefit of people living in the other towns in the territory.

The picture and the reduced rates were advertised in all the railroad stations and in the newspapers in the towns where they were published.

Korach could also visualize how Omaha merchants would benefit by the railroad excursion. Bringing outsiders into town meant increased revenue for the merchants as well as the theatre. Accordingly they cooperated with him to make the showing of "The Jazz Singer" an Event Week.



Ingenius use of poster cutout featured the street ballyhoo illustrated above. This exploitation device for the showing of "Feel My Pulse" at the Lyric theatre, Jackson, Tenn., was designed by Emil Bernstecker, manager of that house.

The excursion took place on Friday and Saturday of the second week's run and added the necessary stimulus often lacking during the second week's showing.

By waiting for the second week, Korach also had an opportunity to screen the picture for the Railroad representatives. The screening helped him sell the officials the idea.

Petition to Parents Blank Feature of "Circus" Ad

An appeal direct to the heart of the family was a feature of the Grauman's Chinese Theatre campaign during the first run of "The Circus" at Los Angeles.

One of the largest display ads of the campaign was devoted to "a personal message to every kiddie in Southern California from Sid Grauman," as the copy was headed, in a three-column by 12 inches space.

The text read:

"Get out your scissors before you start reading this—for you'll need them. to cut out this advertisement and place it on your papa's or mama's dinner plate, with the coupon in the lower right-hand corner signed by you. Keep after your parents to bring you to the greatest of all shows and showplaces."

The coupon was a brief request to papa and mama to be signed by the child.

Theatre Guests Draw Mob to Show at Florida

It's nothing unusual for a man of national prominence to gather a crowd but when an unknown photographer sets out to turn the trick—that's NEWS. The stunt was not only news but proved to be a good ballyhoo for "West Point" playing at the Florida Theatre, Daytona Beach, Fla.

Manager Earle M. Holden had whispered a few kind words into the ears of the local Boy Scouts and the result was, the Scouts marched to the theatre Monday night in a body as guests of the management. Before entering the theatre, they posed for a picture.

While the Scouts were in posing position, the photographer took his own sweet time in getting the final setting. The longer he waited, the larger the crowd became. Consequently, it was necessary to detail several policemen to the scene, because traffic was at a complete standstill.

Briefs

ONLY once in a while, and maybe never, is a theatre manager so fortunate in having access to display material of such potent appeal as the Lindbergh souvenirs which Mike Mayen, manager of the Tower theatre in St. Paul, obtained for his presentation of "The Legion of the Condemned." The souvenirs were the original wheels from Col. Lindbergh's "Spirit of St. Louis" on his flight to France. These were left with the 10th Squadron (Observation) by the aviator while on his U. S. tour and were loaned by that organization to Manager Mayen for display. In return Maven entertained the entire personnel of the squadron at a special showing of "The Legion of the Condemned." The wheels were displayed in the lobby of the Tower. A pilot from the squadron stood guard over the display and answered any aviation questions the public desired to ask.

A NOVEL stage presentation was used as advance publicity for the showing of "Sorrell and Son" at the Texas theatre, San Antonio. The presentation set featured a huge book, 12 x 8 feet, representing the Warwick Deeping novel. This was masked with a scrim curtain upon which the advance trailer for "Sorrell and Son" was projected. Then a spotlight revealed the book and the scrim was raised to disclose a boy dressed as Kit Sorrell. The boy turned the pages of the book, disclosing several display boosts for the attraction and closing with the announcement of the play dates at the Texas.

FIRST NATIONAL'S advertising and publicity department has introduced a new feature for inclusion in all press books issued by the company. The new sales aid is a picture puzzle tying up with the picture to be advertised. Each press book carries one of these puzzles, devised and drawn by A. W. Nugent, famous picture puzzle constructor for newspaper syndicates. The puzzles are designed for publicity purposes in connection with newspaper tie-ups, throw-aways, printing in house programs or merchant cooperative stunts.

UNIVERSAL has issued a unique exploitation aid in the form of a special advance news bulletin on "The Man Who Laughs." The bulletin features reproductions of production shots taken at the studio and on location, with news captions describing them. They are offered for use by theatres in lobby displays or window tie-ups to be exhibited well in advance of playing dates.

FOR the world premiere of "Ramona," at the St. Francis Theatre, San Francisco, the campaign included a city wide drive in the schools, the production being based on the romance which is a favorite history and literature study throughout the state. A letter about this picture was sent to every school principal, tying up the historical idea with the photoplay, and stressing thte faithful interpretation of the famous novel on the screen.

WHEN "The Cohens and Kellys in Paris" played at the Temple Theatre, Lorain, Ohio, Universal Exploiteer A. J. Sharick cooperated with the Journal on a newspaper contest for youngsters who knew their Paris. Prizes were offered for the best essays on what points of interest the Cohens and Kellys should visit in Paris.

Organ Feature Exploited Through Auto Tie-up

For the first time in the history of the Arcade Theatre, Jacksonville, Fla., the organ program was given an advertising background such as is usually accorded the feature picture.

Bob Mitchell, the organist, featured the solo, "Henry's Made a Lady Out of Lizzie," and on this one number, Manager Chas S. Morrison was able to tie up with the local Ford agency in a series of stunts that caused business to jump upwards.

The day before picture opened, a parade of Fords took place consisting of a 1913 model and seven 1928 models. One of the new models carried two huge discs on the top to represent a victrola record with the words in the center, "Henry's Made a Lady Out of Lizzie." The Victor record and victrola agency furnished an electrola for use in the lobby. And the Ford agency had one of their new model Fords in the lobby, too. A hidden loud speaker in the car, and a concealed wire leading to an electrola inside the theatre where a boy kept playing the record, were sufficient to attract large crowds.

Children Goal of Taylor's Drive for "Old Ironsides"

Charley Taylor, of the Buffalo theatre advertising and publicity staff, negotiated some clever tie-ups in connection with the showing of "Old Ironsides" at the Buffalo during the week of March 25. He effected a tie-up with the Buffalo Evening News, which ran several stories before the picture opened. He also hooked up with the navy recruiting stations in this district, and got a navy truck to amble around town disporting "Old Ironsides" posters. But his best stunt was in sending out 250 booklets about "Old Ironsides," along with a letter signed by Mayor Frank X. Schwab, to every school principal in Buffalo and vicinity.

Des Moines Redhead Club Exploits Bow Feature

Through the efforts of the Des Moines Evening Tribune and Manager E. Levine of the Des Moines Theatre, Des Moines, Ia., a Redhead Club was formed which was in connection with the exploitation of Clara Bow in "Red Hair."

Every girl 18 years or older was invited to join the Club and attend a free showing of "Red Hair" by appearing at the newspaper photographic studio and have their picture taken.

The only other requirements to be a member of this newest Club was to have red or auburn colored hair.

Bird Cages Feature Lobby Display for "The Dove"

Manager T. Y. Walker figured he could make a couple of bird cages cheaper than he could purchase them, and, at the same time, give them more attention value in his lobby to advertise "The Dove," playing at the Noble Theatre, Anniston, Ala.

The cages were painted with gold bronze, and each contained a cut-out from the one-sheet with star, picture, theatre and play dates on them.

Personal Endorsement of Anniversary Show Distributed by Ushers

AMONG the novel ideas employed in exploiting the Butterfield Anniversary Week Show at the theatres in that circuit was a specially printed card, signed by "Your Usher" and bearing a personal recommendation of the event. These cards were given to patrons by the ushers in the various Butterfield houses after they had escorted people to their seats.

The cards, which were distributed at all performances for a week in advance of the Anniversary Show, carried the following message:

"Personal Information, If You Please. Our manager has explained to us, in a brief way, what you may expect for entertainment during the Butterfield Anniversary Week. From what I know you surely won't be disappointed, as all programs will be augmented, disregarding the extra cost, and without any increase in regular admission. It surely will be a personal pleasure to me to escort you to a seat during this Gala Week of Entertainment. Kindly let me know just where you prefer to be seated, and I will endeavor to place you in that desired location. Most cordially, Your Usher."

Daytona's First Premiere Gives "Legion" Angle for Model Drive

THE world's premiere of "Legion of the Condemned" at the Florida theatre, Daytona, was productive of one of the most extensive and widely supported exploitation campaigns conducted by a theatre in that city.

One of the local newspapers saw possibilities for arousing public interest in the fact that Daytona was to be the scene of the world's premiere of an important feature and called upon Manager Earle M. Holden for readers two weeks in advance of play date and kept calling upon him for material right up to the opening.

Another of the local newspapers offered a free admission pass to all Government and local air pilots. This tie-up secured additional publicity for the picture.

A day or so before "Legion of the Condemned" was booked for the Florida, Frank Lockhart was in Daytona trying to break the world's speed races—crashed into the ocean after making 225 miles an hour. A local photographer secured some excellent pictures of Lockhart in the water and his rescue. About eight different views of the rescue scenes were mounted on a three-sheet card. This display was usd in the lobby for a week and the racing scenes were then replaced by stills.

On day of opening, a three-sheet cut-out was placed in front of box office and a special artist's card announced the World's Premiere.

Holden received a tip that the propeller used by Brock and Schlee on the "Pride of Detroit" when they attempted to make a world's endurance flight in Daytona was still in town—and this was secured. This propeller was placed on a one-sheet frame and underneath was a special card telling that this particular propeller was used by Brock and Schlee—the round the world aviators—when they made an attempt to break the endurance record.

In keeping with the theme of the picture, all the ushers wore pure white aviation helmets and goggles on their foreheads.

Letter of Errors Featured as Tie-up for "Student Prince"

A "LETTER OF ERRORS" contest proved a popular newspaper stunt when it was used by the Toledo News-Bee in conjunction with a theatre tie-up featuring "The Student Prince" at the Valentine theatre, Toledo, O. Manager Len Grotte of the Valentine was assisted by an M-G-M exploiteer in staging the campaign for the production.

A week before play-date, the tie-up with the News-Bee was launched. This stunt revolved about a letter, comprised of many errors that could be detected by well informed movie fans. Prizes were offered readers of the newspaper for the best letter pointing out the errors in the letter printed by the News-Bee.

The letter was addressed to "Dear Norma" and was signed "The Student Prince." The following excerpts from the complete letter illustrate the manner in which the contest was developed.

"Well, here I am in Old Heidelberg, which, as you know, is in the quaint old city of Berlin. It is beautiful here, in fact the entire country of France is beautiful.

"Was telling one of the girl students here about the beautiful theatre in Toledo on the corner of St. Clair and Huron Streets, and I remember how you and I enjoyed seeing Lon Haines and Renee Garbo in 'London After Twelve O'Clock.'

"While we have to study hard here, we still have time to engage in sports. And every time I watch a baseball game, I think of the year 1925 when Toledo won the International League pennant. I can still see the ball park at Bancroft and Dorr Streets, and how Ty Cobb batted them out of the park when we played with Toledo."

Futter Has 175 Camera Men to Seek "Curiosities"

Walter Futter, producer of ''Curiosities'' released through Educational, has an organiaztion of 175 correspondent cameramen sending in subjects from all over the globe. Some 10,000 feet of film comes into the Futter New York headquarters each month, it is said.

Practically all important sections of the world are within reach of these cameramen. Whenever the organization hears of something that would make an interesting subject the local cameraman is instructed to send it in. The ideas for other subjects are very often first submitted by the local men for approval and then ''shot.''

As rapidly as new correspondents are located they are sent a list of subjects made up of those which have proven acceptable in the past, and in this way they get a good idea of the sort of material desired.

Another Sterling House in Seattle Bombed

For the third time in as many months properties of the Sterling Chain Theatres, Inc., in Seattle, Wash., were again attacked by bombs last week. This time the State Theatre, one of the Danz chain, was the subject of the attack, but suffered little damage from an explosion that was heard for miles and shattered windows for blocks around. A total damage of $1,000 was reported, including wreckage of pavement, window breakage, destruction of light posts, etc., all within a block of the theatre, at First Avenue and Madison Street.

W. Beery to Return to Drama in Tully Story

Wallace Berry, for more than a year in comedies, will return to dramatic characterizations in ''Beggars of Life,'' which Paramount is preparing to make from Jim Tully's narrative. It will be an all-star cast, including Richard Arlen and Louise Brooks. Beery at present is busy on another comedy with his partner and co-featured player, Raymond Hatton.

Maxwell Anderson, co-author of ''What Price Glory,'' used the book as the basis for a stage play a few years ago, calling it ''Outsiding Looking In.''

Desberg Continues Head of Loew's Ohio Chain

Fred Desberg, who with Joseph Laronge and Ed. Strong last week sold his interest in Loew's Ohio Theatres, Inc., to Loew's Theatres, Inc., will continue as general manager of the circuit. This was announced upon Desberg's return to Cleveland from New York early in the week.

Key City Reports

New York City

JUST a fair week's business can be chalked up for the last one among Broadway houses with the exception of a few outstanding attractions which stood well out in front. Of course, the falling off in theatre trade during Lent is somewhat responsible for depression in some of the houses but the fact remains that those theatres having strong pictures did what can be rated as good business, while those with just mediocre attractions fell behind the usual average—and that's that.

M-G-M and Paramount both shared equally in the week's highlights, the former with "The Trail of '98" doing a heavy trade at the Astor for the first week and in addition getting a pleasing assortment of well wishes from our ennuied motion picture critics on local newspapers. Paramount's "Legion of the Condemned" has been packing the Rialto since it first appeared and there can be no doubt that this aviation film will pile up a pretty gross during its extended run.

The Strand with "The Noose" also did well enough to warrant holding this picture for another week, the Barthelmess film only feeling a slight dip from what can be considered a good week's business and this can no doubt be attributed to seasonal reasons. Warners theatre, with the new W. B. picture "Tenderloin" also received a good break. Changes in the "talkie" parts which brought forth some tin-panning from critics in this neck of the woods have been made—so after all critics are of some use, at times.

An anniversary program of elaborate proportions and a Fox film "Dressed to Kill" were enough to keep the Roxy comfortably filled for the second week. Warners' "The Jazz Singer" will follow for a two weeks stay and real business, such as "What Price Glory" and "Seventh Heaven" gave the Roxy, is predicted. The Paramount did somewhat better with "The Garden of Eden" (U. A.) than it did the week previous with Negri's "Secret Hour" and attendance was almost up to normal.

After spending nine weeks at the Liberty it could well be expected that "The Gaucho" would not continue to any whirlwind business when it moved to the Rivoli, even at popular prices, and this fact coupled with the taken for granted seasonal depression will no doubt account for a falling off at the gate. The Colony's last week at popular prices with Ufa's "A Modern Du Barry" didn't get the house any more than just an average Colony gross, perhaps even below the mark. The Capitol also felt the gaff with "Bringing Up Father," a picture patterned from the McManus cartoons. The film is blamed for the drop.

While "Two Lovers," the Colman-Banky picture, is not rated as strong as its predecessor "Love" at the Embassy, there's more love nest atmosphere in it and it's in for a run—how long is hard to tell at the present. Anything of this sort can ride along for some time with the reputation the theatre has created for itself.

Fox's "Four Sons" continues to do nicely at the Gaiety and Paramount's "Wings" still manages to have a line at the box office. The latter is making a remarkable run. "Mother Machree" (Fox) also registered a very fair week's business at the Globe and the same can be put down for "Simba" at the Earl Carroll. The Cameo held "Czar Ivan the Terrible" for an average Cameo week. At the Central "Uncle Tom's Cabin" (U) continues at a fair rate. "Sunrise" is at Times Square.

There is an odd picture which has been showing at the Greenwich Village theatre titled "The Last Moment" which has come in for much commendation from New York critics. The film has been there for three weeks and has done a very good business.

Chicago

PULLING power of a big name act was the outstanding feature of Chicago loop business last week, George Jessel, in person, heading the bill at the Chicago, which had as its screen feature "The Heart of a Follies Girl," the combination drawing good business despite the Lenten slump which was felt throughout the city. At the Oriental, "Tillie's Punctured Romance" and Paul Ash and his Gang in "Bubbling Over" played to average crowds, while at McVickers' theatre, "The Patent Leather Kid," which went into its second week, held up fairly well. The Roosevelt was offering "Chicago," with "Forty Miles with Lindbergh" as an extra attraction, the combination, which enjoyed special advertising, going over fairly well.

United Artists ended the run of "The Circus," this Chaplin success making way for Mary Pickford in "My Best Girl" on Friday. "The Circus" was letting down slightly towards the end of its run, but "My Best Girl" started off well.

De luxe neighborhood houses throughout the city reported business below par. "A Girl in Every Port" was the feature attraction at both the Granada and Marbro, while at the former Benny Meroff headed the stage bill and at the latter Charles Kaley. Vitaphone features also completed programs at these houses, which did a fairly satisfactory business. The Uptown screen attraction was "West Point," with the reliable Benny Kreuger offering "Havana" as the stage attraction. attendance being slightly below average for the week.

"Gentlemen Prefer Blondes" occupied the screen at the Tivoli, with Frankie Masters and orchestra heading the stage bill, which included Ruth Etting. business being about normal. Douglas Fairbanks, in "The Gaucho," a special Movietone bill and the Capitol Merrymakers in "Midnite Frolics," pulled well at the Capitol. The Avalon, with "If I Were Single." on the screen, Vitaphone, and Roy Detrich and his stage band succeeded in doing only less than average business.

Birmingham

PICKINGS were rather lean along the local Rialto the past week, although the Alabama, with Clara Bow in "Red Hair" (Par) and a good Publix stage show seemed to "click" at the b. o. Reports indicate that the Temple, with Loew vaudeville and King Vidor's "The Crowd," had a fair week, although critics did not agree that the picture rated more than fair. The Ritz, with Keith vaudeville and "Legionnaires in Paris (FBO), with Al Cooke and Kit Guard, had a rather poor week.

"Freckles" (FBO), Gene Stratton-Porter's production, ran up a rather indifferent gross at the Trianon, while "Tillie's Punctured Romance" (Christie-Par) was not so hot at the Strand.

Weather conditions were against the theatres, as continued cold and rainy days kept the usual patronage at home by the fireside.

Los Angeles

"WINGS," with special synchronized sound effects, at the Biltmore, ended its tenth week with continued success. All records for attendance for a special show at advanced prices and twice daily have been passed so far. Saturday and Sunday, with matinee and evening shows, all attendance records at the Biltmore were shattered. Hundreds were unable to buy tickets.

"The Patsy" drew them in large numbers to Loew's State. The picture was well advertised locally. Eddie Peabody, the banjo king, arranged a great show for his last appearance at Loew's State.

King Vidor's picture, "The Crowd," is dominating at the Million Dollar. The picture registered a heavy business for the week, as did "Sadie Thompson" at United Artists. "Ramona" supplants "Sadie" Wednesday with L. A. audiences.

"Scarlet Youth" is getting by nicely at Tally's—now starting its tenth week. Advertised as a sex drama, the policy of the theatre is to admit women only from Monday to Friday. Men only are admitted on Saturday and Sunday.

To date, "The Circus," at Grauman's Chinese, is a record breaker, and the picture has been viewed by over 200,000 persons since the opening. Such world-famed circus artists as Poodles Hanneford, the Rooneys and Pallenberg bears appear in the prologue, while throngs are attracted to Sid Grauman's open air menagerie and sideshow in the forecourt.

"The Patent Leather Kid" is playing to heavy business, but its booking schedule makes it impossible to keep the picture at the Criterion after Tuesday.

At the Metropolitan, Wallace Beery and Raymond Hatton in "Partners in Crime" did just the average business. The picture probably had too much competition from other film successes. There was help from Fanchon & Marco's "The Ingenues," advertised to be twenty-two glorified American girl's direct from Ziegfeld's Follies.

Not breaking any records for paid customers, the Carthay Circle drew good patronage the past week at all shows with "Four Sons."

Pittsburgh

"ROSE-MARIE," at the Penn, did better business than was expected for the reason that Joan Crawford is a big favorite in this town and the general talk around favored her performance. The stage show, "Dancing Brides," also pleased. The Stanley, playing Billie Dove in "The Heart of a Follies Girl," and Gus Edwards' Revue clicked, all hands being satisfied. The Davis did poorly, as their headline act, Winnie Lightner, withdrew Tuesday, due to sickness, the feature picture being "The Wise Wife," a Pathe picture. The Aldine had poor matinees, with nights fair, their attractions being "The Opening Night" and vaudeville. At the Cameo, two re-issues, "Keeper of the Bees" and "St. Elmo," did nicely.

"Wife Savers," a Beery-Hatton picture, at the Grand, seemed to be a favorite with the men, but the women stayed away, meaning a poor week. "Sharp Shooters," at the Olympic, did an average business.

The legits literally starved to death, one house being closed and the other two played to ten rows of people nightly, excluding Friday and Saturday nights.

Boston

NUMEROUS trade conventions during the week in Boston have brought an influx of transient patrons to the down town theatres, which has aided in maintaining the attendance at many of the theatres. While it was expected that the week might prove spotty, indications are that it will go through with the same excellent business which has been the rule all season.

Metropolitan enjoyed such good business with the comedy, "Tillie's Punctured Romance," that it will be followed by another comedy feature, "Feel My Pulse." "Rio Romance" was the stage number.

Loew's State enjoyed a big week with "Sadie Thompson" and had as its stage number the Silvertown Cord Orchestra of broadcasting fame.

"The Dove" grossed better than expected at Loew's Orpheum and did one of the best week's business at this house of any film this season.

"The Jazz Singer" continues to do big business at the Modern and Beacon theatres in its sixth week, thereby breaking all former records for the length of a run at either playhouse.

"That's My Daddy," at the Keith-Albee Boston, piled up a big week which was the envy of many of the down-town houses.

Other films reporting a good week's business are "Burning Daylight," at the Scollay Square Olympia and at the Washington street Olympia, the first week, when the same film has played simultaneously at these two theatres; "Beau Sabreur," at the University; "Sporting Goods," at the Lancaster; "Love and Learn," at the Fenway; "West Point," at the Exeter and the Capitol, and "Man Woman and Sin," at the Bowdoin Square.

Seattle

AFTER a tremendous opening week, the Seattle theatre came right back for its second week, just closed, with another record showing at the box office—in fact, a record just about as great as the opening seven days. The program, including Lon Chaney's "Big City," John Murray Anderson's Publix stage revue, "Highlights," and a score of other musical and film features, was decidedly pleasing to audiences, the picture being by far a better bet than the opening film. Business for the matinees is a bit slow, but the night shows are packed and the house is playing to business in excess of $20,000.

As was expected, the Fifth Avenue theatre is showing a slight decrease in box office receipts as a result of the Seattle opening. The program at the Fifth Avenue last week was "The Heart of a Follies Girl" and Fanchon-Marco's "Eight Victor Artists" presentation. The film was mediocre in its appeal, and the act was rather disappointing to picture house audiences, who like dancing, comedy, girls and flash for their stage fare, at least in this city. Oliver Wallace, at the Wurlitzer, is showing his old time pulling power for the house. Business for the week was just about average.

At the United Arists theatre, "The Gaucho" continues to do a very pleasing business in its second week, though it is not the great box office success that previous Fairbanks films have been. Business was very successful, as a whole, and the film is being held for part of a third week.

"The Circus," at the Columbia theatre, continued to play to good houses for the third and final week, and established a very pleasing total gross for Manager Bender as his first three-week film in many months. It was not a great attraction, for some reason, but succeeded in piling up a steady patronage that was quite successful.

At the Blue Mouse theatre, "If I Were Single" was an average attraction that did not play to quite as many persons as the average good week at this house usually includes. Vitaphone and Movietone helped in the gross. An average week.

"Night Life," at the Embassy theatre, continued to please the fans at this house, but Joe Danz is not doing so well at his newly-acquired Liberty theatre, where "Rose of Kildare" was the attraction.

The Orpheum theatre, opening its new continuous run grind policy with three-a-day vaudeville and four-a-day feature pictures at 50c top, played to much larger audiences and showed a slight increase in gross. "Carnival of Fun" week, on the stage, and "Stand and Deliver," on the screen, were the attractions. The stage fare ranked first. Business quite good.

Pantages theatre, in an attempt to buck the new Orpheum policy, brought the Duncan Sisters back in a return engagement. After packing the house for every show two weeks ago, the girls this time were rather a disappointment, doing only a small share of business more than the average good week. "Woman Wise" was a mediocre screen attraction. Business slightly better than average.

Opening Vitaphone and Movietone at the Egyptian theatre, with a second run of "Seventh Heaven" on the screen, Al Rosenberg and Al Finkelstein did the biggest business in the history of the house since its opening three years ago. The film played a full week with standing lines every night, which is quite a record for a 1,600-seat suburban theatre, and the show is being held over for another few days. Business very big.

Cincinnati

DESPITE the excellence of the programs at the various houses, business seems to show more or less slump here and there, due, apparently, to the first warm days of spring, and the consequent urge to get out into the "open spaces."

Douglas Fairbanks, in "The Gaucho," held over at Keith's for the second week, drew a good attendance for the run.

The Albee, with "Feel My Pulse," aided and abetted by stage acts, brought the customary returns for this house.

"Shepherd of the Hills," at the Capitol, which house also features Vitaphone, kept 'em coming in satisfactory numbers.

The Lyric did a fair business with "The Showdown," as did also the Walnut, with "French Dressing."

The Strand, with "The Leopard Lady," piled up a fairly satisfactory gross.

"Shanghaied," first half, and "Finnegan's Ball," second half, went over pretty good at the Family.

Gifts, daily change house, had a satisfactory week.

Kansas City

ATTENDANCE at first run houses in Kansas City last week was pretty much a puzzle. The first half of the week matinee business, as well as night business, was exceptionally good, but it fell off noticeably towards the end of the week, which might have been caused by unusually warm weather for this time of the year.

"The Divine Woman," with Greta Garbo, played to well filled houses the first half of the week, the latter half not being so good, which also can be said of Billie Dove in "The Heart of a Follies Girl," at the Globe. "The Patent Leather Kid," featuring Richard Barthelmess, played to good crowds all week at the Liberty, despite the fact that it was a return engagement for the picture.

At the Newman, "The Showdown" did average business the latter part of the week and good business the first part, which also was true of "Soft Living," at the Pantages theatre.

Ottawa

THE observance of Mi-Careme (Mid Lent) as a break in Lenten restrictions resulted in tremendous business for the theatres of Ottawa, Ontario, and Hull, Quebec, Sunday patronage in Hull being particularly heavy.

Two of the prize box-office gems of the week in Ottawa were "The Last Waltz," at B. F. Keith's Theatre, and "The Latest From Paris," at the Imperial Theatre. These two features did relatively better than the second week's showing of "The Circus" at the Regent Theatre, thus proving indirectly that Ottawa does not care for special runs of two weeks.

Manager J. M. Franklin, of Keith's, referred to it as a record-breaking week with "The Last Waltz," coupled with excellent vaudeville. Also the crowds swarmed to the Imperial to see Norma Shearer like they have not done for months. They thought she was much better in "The Latest From Paris" than she was in "Student Prince."

Billie Dove was an eyeful in "The Heart of a Follies Girl" at the Centre Theatre, and the glamor and tinsel of the proverbial Follies had much to do with the success of this picture.

It was also a splendid week for the "neighborhoods." Crowds blocked the sidewalk in front of the Fern Theatre for "Dance Magic," to which was added an episode of "On Guard" and a comedy.

Manager Nolan also found crowds so good at the Rex Theatre for "Private Izzy Murphy" that he ran a special Saturday A. M. show, something out of the ordinary for a suburban house in Ottawa. The first chapter of "Blake of Scotland Yard" also drew the juveniles.

Announce Rin-Tin-Tin for the Columbia Theatre and there is always a pronounced response. This happened with "Tracked by the Police."

New Orleans

BOX office receipts at the downtown first run theatres fell off badly during the past week. This is attributed to the Lenten season. New Orleans has a huge Catholic population and with Lenten services and missions nightly, attendance was dwindled.

The New Saenger Theatre did the best business of the week although far short of its usual top. "The Student Prince," starring Ramon Navarro and Norma Shearer was the film attraction and was well liked by those who saw it. Coupled with the film was the New York Publix Stage Show with Ben Black as master of ceremonies.

Running the New Saenger a close tilt for first honors was its across the street neighbor, Loew's State Theatre. An excellent bill was featured on the screen in "The Shepherd of the Hills," with Molly O'Day, John Boles and Alec B. Francis. Five big, well balanced vaudeville acts were also presented, but it was the picture that drew them. Excellent exploitation and publicity did the trick for Manager Rodney D. Toups.

The Saenger Strand played "The Enemy," with Lillian Gish and Ralph Forbes. Patrons came away highly pleased but they did not come in big numbers. "Cameo Kirby," with John Gilbert, was the Palace feature, but business was not up to the average.

Business at the Orpheum was way off. "Come to My House" was the photoplay and was presented with strong vaudeville numbers.

The Crescent's business was fair. "Rin Tin Tin" was featured in "A Race for Life." In addition there was a musical comedy show. But those who did go to the theatre were attracted by the stage bill and not the picture. "Wickedness Preferred" was the Libery presentation and despite the popularity of the stars, Lew Cody and Aileen Pringle, business was way off. Excellent entertainment, though.

Buffalo

WITH favorable weather prevailing throughout virtually the entire week, business at the leading theatres here was excellent last week, in spite of some rather keen competition. The Buffalo reported very satisfying box office receipts for the "Taka-Chance" week show, when the public was kept ignorant of the screen and stage attractions and invited to take a chance. "Her Wild Oat" was the film and a Publix revue that ran for a whole hour and featured the Ritz brothers was the presentation offering. The week started off big at the Buffalo, but quieted down some toward the end.

Constance Talmadge, in "Breakfast at Sunrise," and Vannessi topping the vaudeville bill, lured the customers to the Hippodrome in pleasing numbers, and healthy box office receipts were reported. The Lafayette put on a gala vaudeville carnival, with ten acts, and Harold Lloyd on the screen in a revival of "Grandma's Boy," and the public responded nicely. Loew's had the Watson Sisters, native Buffalonians, topping the stage bill, and "The Crowd" on the screen, and capacity audiences attended almost every performance—the Watson Sisters are tremendously popular in their native town. The Great Lakes reported excellent patronage of the week's bill, which consisted of "Love Me and the World Is Mine" as the feature film, and a good stage bill, headed by Lieut. Ferdinando and his Havana orchestra.

Milwaukee

MILD spring weather aided the attractions in down town theatres to draw good patronage last week. Things were fairly lively, especially in the beginning of the week. The Wisconsin offered "The Last Command" and drew very good houses.

"Cheating Cheaters," at the Alhambra, was a fairly good business getter. The greater attraction here was no doubt the fashion show, staged in addition to the photoplay. The Garden showed "Chicago" for a second week and found the picture kept up its good record of the first week.

"French Dressing" made a strong appeal to the patrons of the Strand. Business was good. "The Gateway of the Moon" fared only fairly well at the Merrill. "Chicago After Midnight" was very favorably commented on at the Orpheum, where it added greatly to the bill.

Outlying theatres found business rather dull during the week. "The Student Prince," at the Modjeska, was well attended. "Wine," at the Venetian, succeeded in bringing in satisfactory results. "Man Crazy," at the Milwaukee and National, drew fair houses. "Doomsday" failed to connect at the Oriental. "Love and Learn," at the Egyptian, was fairly successful.

Harrisburg, Pa.

GENERALLY good weather and particularly strong attractions combined to give the first-run theatres of Harrisburg a very satisfactory week, speaking from both the artistic and financial viewpoints. The Douglas Fairbanks picture, "The Gaucho," topped them all so far as box office receipts were concerned. This picture was shown at Loew's Regent to crowds that taxed the capacity of the house both afternoons and evenings. The general verdict was that this is a splendid picture and that "Dougie" has lost none of his pep for the strenuous parts of his role.

"Old Ironsides" was only a degree less of a money-maker than the Fairbanks picture, however. It was shown at the Victoria. Interest in the film was not diminished by the fact that it had come here some months before at $2 a seat in a house usually devoted to legitimate shows. In fact, the popularity of the film on its previous showing here seemed to have spurred the business it did on its return.

The attraction at the Colonial was Richard Barthelmess in "The Noose." This actor always has been popular in Harrisburg and his big following did not desert him on this occasion. The film portion of the program at the State, which is part vaudeville, was John Gilbert in "Truxton King," which appealed especially to women patrons. There were thrills aplenty at the Broad Street, where a double bill was offered, consisting of Bob Custer in "The Fighting Hombre" and Al Christie in "Madame, Behave."

The Grand did fairly good business with "The Lady in Ermine," starring Corinne Griffith, and the Capitol got a lot of patronage with Hoot Gibson in "A Hero on Horseback."

Dallas

DALLAS enjoyed a week of ideal spring weather, and business at the theatres has been good without a single exception, which is very unusual. The good pictures offered, together with pretty weather, turned the trick.

At the Melba, "The Student Prince," with Ramon Navarro and Norma Shearer, opened good and continued to hold patronage throughout the week. The fact that the legitimate play, "The Student Prince," was so well received here in 1925 helped a lot. "Silk Legs," with Madge Bellamy, at the Majestic, proved to be a good draw for the entire week. Billy House, heading the vaudeville, accounted for no small part of the business. The Palace, showing Bebe Daniels in "Feel My Pulse," registered another good week and had them standing a good part of the time, and business was steady.

The Capitol, showing "The Fourflusher," with Marian Nixon and George Lewis, had a good picture and receipts for the week were good. The program brought forth many creditable remarks and was well liked. Harold Bell Wright's "The Shepherd of the Hills" was an excellent box office attraction for The Old Mill, and pulled a good business every night and turned the patrons away pleased. The Arcadia did a good business with Olive Borden and Lawrence Grey in "Pajamas" and "The College Hero," with Robert Agnew and Pauline Garon.

Tampa

"THE Legion of the Condemned" started the week in fine shape for the Tampa. This picture opened Sunday to big business and held the receipts up fine for the full four days. It is a sure-fire card. "The Patsy" was featured the last half and it drew nicely, too, so the house enjoyed an excellent week's business.

The Vitaphone presentations continue to pull excellent business for the Victory. Last week they had for the feature "One Round Hogan," and Blossom Seeley was featured in the four presentations shown. A good show and fine business all week.

The Strand opened the week with "Her Summer Hero." This picture did not seem to catch on and the two days were just fair "Chicago After Midnight," used the next three days, brought the receipts up fine. Manager Hobby gave this picture an excellent lobby and put "atmosphere" into the flash by dressing all attaches in regulation underworld style. All of which contributed much towards making this picture a big draw. "The Siren" was featured the last two days and it went over to about average receipts.

The Franklin had just an ordinary week. "Sky High Saunders," "Home-Made," and "The Wagon Show" were featured, none of them pulling anything better than average business.

Minneapolis

SPRING came into Minneapolis with a vengeance this week, and theatre attendance showed a tendency to drop off as a result, although this was partly due to the fact that there were no outstanding attractions to draw in the crowd. "Chicago" came into the Garrick, and did a good business, which warranted its holding over for a second week. "Legion of the Condemned" ended its two weeks' run at the Strand in good style, continuing a strong drawing card until the end; William Haines was at the State in "The Smart Set," but the picture wasn't the only magnet, as Dayton's semi-annual style revue was showing there, and it was staged with the musical comedy "Irene" as a setting. This combination made for an unusually attractive program.

Madge Bellamy in "Soft Living" supplemented the usual Pantages variety show, while the Hennepin Orpheum was featuring William Boyd in "The Night Flyer." Esther Ralston, in "Spotlight" and "40,000 Miles With Lindbergh," were on the same program at the Lyric, and the result was better than average business. The Seventh Street, a vaudeville house, wound up its show with the film comedy, "Legionnaires in Paris."

The attraction at the Grand, a second-run loop house, was "The Student Prince." Some of the neighborhood houses began to feel the effects of the unseasonably warm weather, which broke records for 18 years. "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes," was shown at the Loring and Lagoon, while the Rialto, American and Lyndale were featuring such pictures as "Let 'Er Go, Gallegher," "The Missing Link" and "Sadie Thompson."

The new $2,000,000 Minnesota Theatre opened on a Friday night, with attendance by invitation only, so this huge new house provided competition for the theatres for only one night during the past week. It is felt that other theatres will suffer for a time until the novelty of the Minnesota wears off.

San Francisco

ANOTHER week of good business for the local motion picture houses was reported by both first run and residential theatres in practically every case, the reason being that the theatres, with one exception , having attractive pictures and the weather being ideal.

When the last ticket was purchased at the Embassy theatre Thursday night, March 9th, it was discovered that more than 115,000 persons had entered this house, which seats but 1,608 persons, during the past four weeks to see and hear Al Jolson in "The Jazz Singer." The picture also did exceptionally well the fifth week; parties have been arriving from several nearby localities to hear and see this picture, as all small town theatres have not, to date, ordered it.

"Red Hair," at Loew's Warfield theatre, attracted big crowds all week. The first two evenings crowds 300 feet long stood in row for hours to get in. Special police forces were ordered. The stage attractions also greatly pleased the thousands. "Two Flaming Youths" and the stage attractions drew well at the Granada theatre all week. "40,000 Miles with Lindbergh" also was shown.

"Ramona," at the St. Francis theatre, attracted strongly all week.

One of the biggest disappointments was the picture, "The Crowd," shown at the California theatre. The first night the house was crowded, as the picture was advertised as "one that startles America" with its wonder, but the balance of the week the seats were practically empty, many walking out. The music also was not as good as advertised.

"The Night Flyer," a comedy-drama, together with vaudeville acts, filled the Golden Gate, and the Union Square did good business with "Isles of Forgotten," and their vaudeville acts.

Albany

TWO pictures proved the biggest business getters of the past week in Albany. "The Last Command," at the Mark Strand, came up to expectations from the standpoint of the box office, and filled the theatre to capacity and more each night, with people standing during a part of the second show. The picture had been well advertised. In addition to the feature picture there were also two very good Vitaphone presentations. The other picture to do more than a capacity business was John Gilbert in "12 Miles Out." This picture had them standing night after night. It should be borne in mind, too, that this business was during weather that was none too conducive on one or two days to capacity houses. The Clinton Square theatre, now given over to first run double features, showed better business last week than the previous one. Last week's features consisted of "Night Life" and "Women Wise."

Proctor's Grand used a couple of good drawing pictures last week in "Tea for Three" the fore part and "Cohens and Kellys in Paris" the latter part of the week. At the Mark Ritz, "Wife Savers" was rather heavily criticized by the newspaper boys during the first of the week and this probably affected business to some extent, for the picture did not go over any too well. Proctor's Harmanus-Bleecker Hall, using double features and three acts of vaudeville, reported business as being good. Other neighborhood houses were inclined to protest against business.

In the neighboring city of Troy, "The Patent Leather Kid" set a pace at the Troy theatre that will prove a hard one for many pictures to follow during the weeks to come. The theatre was jammed to its last inch on the opening day, but business fell off somewhat on Sunday, due to a heavy snowstorm that crippled traffic and made going under foot a hard proposition. The picture came back strong for the remainder of the week.

Baltimore

THREE first-run houses did very good business and one house did excellent in Baltimore during the week beginning Monday, March 19.

"The Smart Set," with William Haines and a large presentation act entitled Hula Blues, with Ted Claire and other vaudeville favorites, proved an excellent attraction at Loew's Century.

"Wild Geese," featuring Belle Bennett, Anita Stewart and Eve Southern, proved an equally good attraction at Keith's Hippodrome, where five acts of vaudeville of Keith-Albee family time were given on the same bill.

"The Devil Dancer," starring Gilda Gray, with that star appearing also in person in a stage attraction, constituted part of the bill at the Stanley and pulled very strong throughout the week. An excellent score of music was used for the picture, including many classical selections. The picture and act were well received.

At Loew's Valencia, "The Last Command," starring Emil Jannings, proved a wonderful drawing card, with everyone who saw the picture praising Jannings' work.

"Mad Hour," with Sally O'Neil and Tommy Christian and his orchestra on the same bill, went over fairly well at the Rivoli, while at Warner's Metropolitan, "Beware of Married Men," with Irene Rich and Vitaphone attractions, proved a fair drawing card, as did "Her Summer Hero," featuring Hugh Trevor and Duane Thompson, at the Palace, with burlesque given on the same bill.

"Publicity Madness" pulled only poorly at the New Theatre, but this could not be blamed on the picture, which was good, but rather on the title. "Publicity Madness" seems to mean nothing to the public, and they fear spending their fifty cent pieces to see it. As a matter of fact, it is a very charming little comedy, well acted and directed.

"Judgment of the Hills," featuring Virginia Valli, Frankie Darro and Orville Caldwell, might be called a so-so picture, but with Belle Baker and other Keith Albee high-class acts on the same program the New Garden got away with pretty good business during the entire week.

A Jannings' reissue, "All for a Woman," was shown at the Little Theatre by the Motion Picture Guild. Business was poor there throughout the week, but this might be attributed to the fact that Jannings' latest picture. "The Last Command," was on the program at another theatre.

Atlanta

THE Howard and Capitol theatres held the box office records last week.

Clara Bow, in "Red Hair," won first place for the Howard, and Reginald Denny, with "That's My Daddy," drew second for the Capitol.

Besides having the popular actress, the Howard offered the return of Ray Teal, popular bandmaster, who has been guest conductor for Paramount theatre, New York, for two weeks, as an added incentive to fill the house. The S R O sign hung out continually all week.

"The Crowd" showed at Loew's Grand to average good audiences, falling down from the entertainment angle, but drawing unstinted laudatory commendations from the local critics. All pronounce it one of the best productions from an artistic and greatness view.

Olive Borden, in "Come to My House," played to poor houses at Keith's Georgia, while "Doomsday," with Florence Vidor and Gary Cooper, brought good audiences at the Rialto.

The New Alamo had a usual good week with only one first run, "Madame Wants No Children," which met with only fair approval.

At the Tudor, "Border Cavalier," "Ladies Beware," and "Haunted Range" hauled in a neat return.

"The Jazz Singer" held a strong fort at the Metropolitan, this being its fifth weeks' run. It will also play next week.

Des Moines

SHOWING at the Des Moines, "The Patent Leather Kid" did a very good business, and neither a flu epidemic, the season of the year which is generally considered an off time, the sunny weather outdoors nor the presence of Aimee McPherson in town were enough to offset enthusiasm for the picture and for the splendid record which Richard Barthelmess has maintained. The picture did a very, very good week without making any sensational records.

At the Capitol, however, business was not so good. There was considerable complaint about the picture, "Feel My Pulse," which was considered a poor attempt at the amusement fairly well achieved in "Swim, Girl, Swim." The stage show, "Happy Go Lucky," was not as good as some preceding, though there was a very good chorus, and the Shamrock Dance was appropriate. At the Strand, for a half week, "Across the Atlantic," with Monte Blue, was very well liked. This is the first of the Warner pictures to play at the Strand for a long time, as they have been scheduled at the Orpheum until the scoring of Vitaphone for the Des Moines brought in the Warner pictures to the Blank theatres. "The Whip Woman," playing the last half of the week at the Strand, was rated a poor picture, and complaint was made to the management for the quality of the film.

Cleveland

THIS has been a week of two high spots in the film world, with the rest just pulling along at an average pace.

"Chicago," at Keith's Palace, and "The Gaucho," in its second week at the Stillman, were the two high spots. Incidentally, they were the two best pictures on view. "Chicago" came to the screen well advertised. It has played here earlier in the season at a legitimate theatre. It also has gained notoriety by statements of disapproval by the Ohio Board of Censors. And on its own merits, the picture played to overflowing audiences at every performance. "The Gaucho" is acclaimed another one of Fairbanks' masterpieces. It is being held over. "The Patsy," fairly good entertainment, with emphasis on the comedy, proved just an average magnet to the populace attending the State. The Allen had normal business with "The Garden of Eden," the newest Pollyanna story, as the feature attraction. "Wolf Fangs," a good dog melodrama, did good business at Reade's Hippodrome. "Honeymoon Hate," pleasing comedy entertainment, with matrimonial conflicts as the basis for the comedy, was mildly amusing, and drew average attendance. The Park had big crowds out to see the first-run neighborhood engagement of "Sadie Thompson." The Cameo did only fairly well with a second run down town showing of "The Last Command," although it has been recommended by local critics and heralded as a screen masterpiece. The Oriental had a good week with "Motherhood."

The show business in general was off last week. Nothing especially exciting at the legitimate theatres, excepting only "The Captive," which is in its third week at the Little Theatre. There was nothing to drag folks out. Neighborhood houses also report an "off" week.

Salt Lake City

THEATRE attendance at the down town picture houses last week has been far above the average in most cases. Clear spring weather, as well as some big productions, has aided in improving box office receipts.

Cecil B. DeMille's "King of Kings," which is being roadshowed at the Salt Lake theatre, is doing capacity business and is causing a great deal of high enthusiasm. Mail orders have been filled, coming from as far as one hundred miles away from here, for this great production, which is accompanied by a large and select orchestra.

The Capitol theatre has had big results from the showing of Esther Ralston in "Something Always Happens," which has proven to be a very satisfactory drawing card in conjunction with the Fanchon and Marco stage presentation "Crinoline Days," featuring Jan Rubini and the "Sunkist Beauties."

"The Student Prince" has drawn crowded houses to the Pantages theatre, which also offers Pantages vaudeville.

Norma Talmadge, in "The Dove," played to capacity houses throughout the week's run at the Paramount Empress. Jack Holt, in "The Warning," with Dorothy Revier and Sojin, resulted in above the average box office receipts here.

The American theatre reports their house records for the past two years to have been broken during their presentation of "The Cohens and Kellys in Paris." Lobby displays arranged by Dave Schayer, and unusual exploitation, aided in putting over this comedy in a big manner.

Rod LaRocque, in "Stand and Deliver," played to satisfactorily crowded houses at the Gem theatre.

"Annie Laurie" was shown as a second run at the Rialto this week with fair results.

Opinions on Pictures

Buttons

Fairly Entertaining

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

THAT young Thespian, Jackie Coogan, is armed with a fairly entertaining story here. The boy has oodles of appeal, what with his big eyes and manly little face. He is a page boy on one of the big transoceanic liners. He admires his captain, Lars Hanson, and his ambition is to some day also commandeer one of the huge vessels.

Comedy and some seriousness are linked together. Jackie's feud with a rival page boy, his friendship with an ex-palooka, the manner in which they treat Roy D'Arcy, whom they know for a bounder—all these scenes are occasions for some fun making. The serious chord is struck when Hanson discovers the infidelity of his girl and when he thinks even the little lad, Buttons, has also gone back on him. In a shipwreck, when all hands are thinking of their own safety, the kid comes back to the captain standing alone on the bridge. The two are re-united and picked up when the ship goes down.

In this picture the theme is friendship between a boy and his idol, the captain. The villains of the piece are Gertrude Olmsted and D'Arcy and they have their affair which the captain later discovers. It is fairly balanced as entertainment throughout. The best performances are Coogan's, Hanson's and Paul Hurst's, the former slugger. Miss Olmsted's work is nil. D'Arcy leers occasionally and at times appears in a humorous vein.

Drawing Power: Fairly strong. Okay for neighborhood, second-run, etc. Exploitation Angeles: The press book mentions a button club for boys and girls. Some of the comedy has to do with gym equipment, therefore a tie-up with a sporting goods store would be appropriate.

THEME: The friendship existing between a boy and the captain of an ocean liner.

Produced and Distributed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Released, December, 1927. Length, 6,050 feet. The Cast: Jackie Coogan, Lars Hanson, Paul Hurst, Roy D'Arcy, Gertrude Olmsted, Polly Moran, Jack McDonald, Coy Watson, Jr. Story by George Hill. Titles by Ralph Spence. Adaptation by Hayden Talbot. Continuity by Marian Constance Blackton. Director, George Hill.

The Wreck of the Hesperus

Fairly Good Sea Story

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

THE legend of the schooner Hesperus "that sailed the wintry sea" is duly told in this yarn of the sea directed by Elmer Clifton, who made that excellent sea picture, "Down to the Sea in Ships." He hasn't so powerful a tale to tell here, although they have superimposed another story onto Longfellow's.

The scenes of the wild sea in which the schooner meets her doom are excellently staged. A studio storm, yet that fact is not too obvious. There are crashing billows, the jagged rocks, the floundering ship, the helplessness of the sailors before such a gale. The tragedy is told of how the ship was wrecked on the reef of Norman's Woe. Through the obstinacy of the father, who would not put back to port, the ship sails on in the face of the fierce tempest, and like kindling wood is smashed on the rocks. Lest the story leave a tragic taste, the superimposed tale has the hero save the girl "lashed close to a drifting mast."

Yes, the storm sequence is well produced; therein lies the wallop and action of the picture. Its other portion is uneventful, a trifle deadened, like the calm before a storm. They are building up to the climax, and at times it is a tedious process. But when the climax arrives with a bang it compensates on the whole for the period of calm which precedes it.

Virginia Bradford is the skipper's daughter, a young miss worthy of the pretty description the poet gives in his poem. Frank Marion is the young man. Sam De Grasse as the skipper gives the best performance.

Not a great sea picture. Not as good, as we mentioned above, as "Down to the Sea in Ships." Nor not so well done as "The Sea Beast." Still it has production class.

Drawing Power: A fair proposition for most theatres. Exploitation Angles: The press book is full of them.

THEME: Longfellow's legend with a little bit added to it.

Produced by De Mille Pictures. Distributed by Pathe.. Released, October, 1927. Length, 6,447 feet. The Cast: Sam De Grasse, Virginia Bradford, Frank Marion, Alan Hale, Ethel Wales, Josephine Norman, Milton Aldine, Budd Fine, Slim Summerville, Francis Ford. Adaptation of poem and added story by Harry Carr and John Farrow. Photography by John Mescal. Director, Elmer Clifton..

Fashion Madness

An Average Attraction

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

JUST a series of poses and close-ups are to be had in the first half of this picture. Director Louis Gasnier does not inject any vitality into his scenes until the climax has been reached. This fact, and the fact that the acting is, for the most part, too lifeless, and that the picture is practically empty of punch, make this feature just average fare for audiences.

The blonde Claire Windsor interprets the role of a spoiled girl, another Katherine who needs a Petruchio to tame her. Used to having everything her own way she is furiously indignant when Reed Howes takes her aboard his yacht and transfers her to his lonely cabin in the Canadian wilds. In the forest she learns that her pampered existence has been a sham, and that she is really quite worthless. When Howes is in danger of dying from an infected wound, she and an Indian girl forget their little feud and hike back to the nearest settlement some ten miles away dragging the man after them in a sled whose runners resist the rough obstacles of the trail. The two women struggle along until the Indian maid slips over a precipice, and, rather than drag the man to death, leaps into the void alone, so that the sled, relieved of her weight, is stopped in its descent towards the brink of the cliff. The white girl continues the struggle towards the settlement, which she finally reaches. She is changed after this ordeal, which is an excellent climax for the piece.

But the remainder of the film is too tame. Gasnier should have gotten more out of his incidents.

Drawing Power: Fair. Exploitation Angles: Tieup with modiste shops and put on fashion revue.

THEME: Heart drama. Young society deb, used to her every wish gratified, is subdued by the man she loves who takes her to his cabin in the North woods. When he is in danger of dying she drags him on a sled over a rough road to the nearest settlement, thus revealing that she has true worth and more than a craving for pretty clothes.

Produced and Distributed by Columbia. Released, December, 1927. Length, 5,513 feet. The Cast: Claire Windsor, Reed Howes, Laska Winter, Donald McNamee, Wm. E. Tooker. Story by Victoria Moore. Continuity by Olga Printzlau. Director, Louis J. Gasnier.

The Big City

Chaney-Browning Team Clicks Again

(Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy)

THE Chaney-Browning team has made an altogether showmanly job of this melodramatic adventure in photoplay. It is a crook story touched up with bits of realism, brawls, surprises and not a little syrupy sentiment. The star gives his followers a respite from the grotesquerie of weird make-up of the kind that gave chilly stimulation to his impersonations of such distorted specimen as the professor in "London After Midnight." His portrayal of a hard-boiled cabaret proprietor and master crook in "The Big City,' however, is not lacking in that impressive realism which makes the work of this star so widely popular. A tremendous capacity for heaping on the detail which make his characterizations so vigorous is brought into play here, and the result is a personage whose form and character cuts deep into the consciousness of the spectator.

The play is off to a good start with a scene at a cabaret, with one set of crooks working out a scheme to rob the patrons of their jewels, cash and valuables. Chuck (Lon Chaney) enters, wisely surveys the layout and sits calmly by while his own henchmen cross the other gang and make off with the swag. Chuck's accomplice is a woman who operates a theatrical costume store as a blind. Real jewels can be left about in cardboard boxes just as though they were so much paste, so the arrangement is a convenient one. However, there is a little slavey called "Sunshine" whose outspoken manner embarrasses the crooks when the cops come in to question Chuck.

"Sunshine" remains outspoken, innocent and trusting to the end an end which sees Chuck, Helen and Curly stage a sincere reform. They are a tough crowd, and the toughest is Chuck, but they reform, and there is good humor about it all. So Browning, without sticking his tongue in his cheek, gives his audiences all they desire in the way of suspense, sentiment and amusement. The relieving bits of comedy outshine the dramatic bits, and the final impression is that of complete satisfaction that the show has been a good and enjoyable one.

The acting of Matthew Betz, as usual, is remarkably smooth in the role of Chuck's rival in robbery. Betty Compson is highly decorative and very effective as the feminine accomplice, and Marceline Day does splendidly with her role of the wide-eyed but appealing good little girl. James Murray is another whose work stands out.

Drawing Power: Good, the Chaney fans and all the fans will enjoy this one. Exploitation Angles: Play up as a realistic slice of that phase of city life where the upper and lower strata meet with Chaney in one of his most appealing roles.

THEME: Crook melodrama of rival gang leaders meeting in a battle of wits and daring over the spoils of a big stick-up job, with the game leading to reformation by the stronger gang.

Produced and Distributed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Length, 6,838 feet. Released, March, 1928. The Cast: Lon Chaney, Marceline Day, James Murray, Betty Compson, Matthew Betz, Virginia Pearson, Walter Percival, Lew Short, John George, Eddie Sturgis. Story and Direction by Tod Browning. Scenario by Waldemar Young.

Tracy the Outlaw

An Exceptional Western

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

WE use the word "exceptional" in writing of this western and we heartily believe the picture's excellent qualities justify the use of the superlative. We have seen plenty of westerns—good, bad and indifferent—but we can recall but one that had the vivid, realistic touch that this independently produced western has. It has realism, stark and powerful, to place it far above the usual drama of the open plains. Avoiding the piffle and tommy rot to which producers of western films have been and still are catering, clinging to a strictly hewn line—the bare details of the career of an outlaw—this picture brings home forcefully the fact that it is well done and that it possesses more than an ordinary quantity of good points.

Tracy was one of the west's bad men during the days when it was young. The picture tells his saga. As we see him he was more sinned against than sinning. Marked with the stigma of crime after he had escaped from a Texas gambling hall, he is everywhere sought as a dangerous man. He is forced to flee from state to state, the hunted of posses. There are brief spans of restfullness or security, but these are always broken by impending sounds of pursuit as the net is drawn closer. The outlaw can never relax; he must always be ready to fight back. Finally they corner him and he, but one cartridge left him, turns it on himself.

All throughout it carries that real note Logically, it is quite episodic, but it is so surfeited with that rich, honest flavor. One cannot classify it as the usual horse opera. As a matter of fact it is something which producers of western dramas can shoot at. There are excitement, action, suspense, human emotion in its scenes. A good feature for your programs, Mr. Exhibitor.

Drawing Power: Wherever they like Westerns they'll like this one and feel respect for it, too. Exploitation Angles: Its character ranks with Jesse James and Billy the Kid as one of the West's bad men. Tell them it's real, stirring account. Get your paper to publish an account of the outlaw's fame. The excellent performance of Hoey and the other types.

THEME: The life, brief spans of happiness, and death of Harry Tracy, outlaw.

Produced by Photo-Art Productions. Distributed by New-Cal. (S. R.) Released this month. Length, 6,000 feet. The Cast: Jack Hoey, Rose Chadwick, Dave Marrell, Jane La Rue, Howard Chandler. Adapted from the play by Pierce Kingsley which Percy Williams produced. Titles by Merritt Crawford. Director, Otis B. Thayer.

The Bullet Mark

Usual Western Production

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

FOLLOWING the usual recipe for the western drama, this vehicle for Jack Donovan shows him performing the average brand of heroics. In this one he is a hunter of wild horses, the young chap whom the villains try to frame, but who, of course, emerges victorious from the web of intrigue they have spun around him. The young hunter of wild horses is shown as a two-fisted, hard riding fella. Producers of westerns must have their heroes live up to the usual standard of the screen "he-man." Old Bill Hart when he made westerns years ago did not put in all the present-day assortment of fistic and equinary prowess. The producers later incorporated all the conventional highlights that nearly every present-day cowboy opera has: the rescue of the maiden in distress by the brave hero, the vanquishing of the villain by the hero, the horsemanship feats, etc. Donovan is the average western hero; he does not do his scenes so remarkably well, for he is not such a convincing performer.

The producer has two leading women in his story—Margaret Gray, and Gladys McConnell. They are merely decorative, as the story concerns mainly the villainy of the brother of one of them to "get" the hero.

Drawing Power: Poor. Donovan's name, as yet, means nothing to the customers. Suitable for a double feature bill with other attractions possessing a lure.

Exploitation Angles: Use a target perforated with holes as a reminder of the title of the picture. The ordinary ballyhoo will suffice.

THEME: Western drama in which horse herder fights villainy of ruthless ranchmen. He licks them all and wins a girl doing it.

Produced by F. J. McConnell. Distributed by Pathe. Released, March 25, 1928. Length, 4,550 feet. The Cast: Jack Donovan, Jos. W. Girard, Albert J. Smith, Lincoln Plumer, Margaret Gray, Gladys McConnell. Edited and tilted by Jack Kelly. Director, Stuart Paton.

Red Hair

Clara Bow Does Her Usual

(Reviewed by E. G. Johnston)

TO all appearances this picture has all which is necessary to pull in the army of Clara Bow fans. Elinor Glyn wrote the story, Clarence Badger, director of "It," wielded the megaphone, and during the last reel the author has furnished the star with another opportunity for her audiences to get an eyeful by her usual disrobing stunt. Speaking strictly from a standpoint of picture excellence, in this writer's opinion, this film is just a passable sort of affair, fashioned along the lines of Miss Bow's former success and calculated to repeat—and undoubtedly it will. There can be no criticism of direction, photography or the work of the principals, all being well up to the mark. There is an opening sequence in Technicolor which discloses the popular Clara's auburn tresses. This is something new for the Bow fans.

The story is along romantic-comedy lines, the star cast as a gold-digging manicurist, who manages to acquire considerable in the way of comforts in life without giving up anything. Three elderly bachelors, the guardians of the man she is to eventually meet and marry, are her particular prey. A successful engagement is finally accomplished in spite of the guardians' objections and many other complications which beset the heroine at a party held in honor of her approaching marriage.

The high lights of the picture are the scenes at "Beverley Beach"' and those in last reel, where in spite of Miss Glyn's warning that a red-haired girl should never be "riled," she does get that way, tosses back all her gifts of clothing, etc., to her admirers and tops it off by diving in a pool, a la Bow.

Drawing Power: Miss Bow's popularity will pack 'em in. Exploitation Angles: The usual tie-up with the Glyn book, and if you have enough red-haired people around you might exploit them; also barber and manicure shops. Seems as though both the star's and author's names should be sufficient.

THEME: Gold-digging little manicurist finally meets man she loves and seeks to give up her graft, but necessity for fine clothes makes further pursuit necessary, which, in turn, serves to bring on many complications. The ending is a pleasant one.

Produced and distributed by Paramount. Length, 6,331 feet. Released, March 10, 1928. The Cast: Clara Bow, Lane Chandler, Lawrence Grant, Claude King, William Austin and Jacqueline Gadson. Directed by Clarence Badger. Story by Elinor Glyn.

"Jungle Days"

(Fables-Pathe—One Reel)

DENIZENS of the jungle are depicted under all sorts of propulsion in this Fables cartoon. Elephants, tigers, lions and other wild beasts are on skates, bicycles and motor propelled vehicles, out of which the artist gets most of what humor there is in the cartoon. It is a tale of the love of Norman for pretty Gwendolyn and it is unrequited love, for just about the time Norman figures he has made the grade and has Gwen at his feet, she makes her getaway astride a lion as Norman and the rival look on. It is just about up to the usual standard of this series.—CHESTER J. SMITH.

My Friend From India

A Good Laugh Getter

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

THE play by H. A. de Souchet provides Franklin Pangborn with an effective laugh vehicle. Interspersed freely along the route of the plot are many farcical moments which are effective laugh pullers. The idea of a lovesick young man impersonating a Swami so that he can be near his girl can be juggled so that a number of laughs are achieved. This is Pangborn's first stellar feature. Not a bad one by far for the fans to get acquainted with him.

There are some good laugh incidents. Two especially are good, that in which old Tom Ricketts chases Pangborn all over the drawing room thinking him to be the lady whose hand he seeks, and that wherein Ethel Wales primps before a mirrorless mirror while Panghorn does his best to act as her reflection. Of course, this latter gag is not new, but it good for some laughs all the same.

Elinor Faire puts more pep and personality into her acting than she has in many of her previous pictures. Ben Hendricks, Jr., Miss Wales and Ricketts turn in some funny antics. The new De Mille player, Jeanette Loff, shows how provocatively pretty she is. E. Mason Hopper gave the piece a swift, gaggy tempo. You don't find the farce doing a fadeout. It is generally there clicking pretty well.

Drawing Power: Good stuff for the neighborhood houses and their fellows. Will fill suitably the comedy demands of a program. Exploitation Angles: Have your ballyhoo men garbed as a Hindu, with turban 'n everything. The crystal gazing is a part of the story which you can bring out by a display of fortune telling cards, crystals and the like.

THEME: Farce in which boy sees a girl, falls rapidly in love with her and loses her again, without either of them divulging their names. Getting in a scrape with his friend he is forced to seek refuge in the latter's house in which he disguises himself as a Hindu prince to please his friend. The boy finally gets out of this tight situation and marries the girl, who is none other than his friend's sister.

Produced and Distributed by Pathe. Released, December, 1927. Length, 5,750 feet. The Cast: Franklin Pangborn, Ben Hendricks, Jr., Elinor Faire, Jeanette Loff, Tom Ricketts, Ethel Wales, Louis Natheaux, Tom Dugan, George Ovey. Adapted by Rex Taylor from his play. Director, E. Mason Hopper.

The Tragedy of Youth

A Well Done and Interesting Story

(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

MODERN youth and marriage and their relation to each other are splendidly portrayed in this good story, which is excellently enacted by a more than capable cast. It is a tale of youthful selfishness and egotism in married life that is not a preachment, but a realistic recounting of conditions that send many young couples on the matrimonial rocks.

Golf is usually charged more than any other sport with the creation of married widows, but here we have the new type, the bowling widow. Buster Collier is the egotistical and happy selfish newlywed, who makes a stay-at-home and neglected wife of Patsy Ruth Miller while he devotes his evenings to the bowling alleys. She is of the somewhat weak and yielding type that craves devotion and pleasure. She gets both through the medium of her young husband's good friend and a mutual love affair is created between them.

The husband discovers the true condition. There are quarrels, reconciliations and finally he pretends suicide, as a result of which the affair between the wife and friend is temporarily at an end when the lover departs on an ocean voyage, but the spark of love between husband and wife is dead, at least so far as she is concerned. There is a shipwreck in which the lover is supposed to have perished, but he returns and the young wife falls into his arms.

Warner Baxter is the lover and the leading trio do their parts so well that is a completely convincing story. It carries with it a theme that should be widely exploited among the present jazz-mad youth of the world.

Drawing Power: It is a good picture, well done and should draw well in houses of every description . Exploitation Angles: The theme will offer a number of suggestions through which good newspaper tie-ups can be effected. The popularity of the leading players can be exploited to advantage.

THEME: Drama in which the young married couple is disillusioned shortly after the ceremony when the husband pursues his bowling and the wife falls in love with his friend, who eventually wins her away from the neglectful husband.

Produced and distributed by Tiffany-Stahl Productions. Length, 6,273 feet. Released March 1, 1928. The Cast: Warner Baxter, Patsy Ruth Miller, Buster Collier, Claire Mc Dowell, Harvey Clark, Margaret Quimby, Steppin Fetchit, Billie Bennett. Directed by George Archinbaud. Continuity by Olga Printzlau. Titles by Frederick and Fanny Hatton.

"Hints on Hunting"—"A Day By the Sea"

(Educational—One Reel)

ROBERT C. BRUCE humorously lets drop pointers for the hunting of big game in this new Outdoor Sketch. The animals he shows are not the "wild" kind; that is, dangerous. With excellent photographic stance he shows shots of the marmot or whistler, the Canadian honker or wild duck, a timid little fawn, mountain sheep and some well-fed ambling bears.

In the second subject are scenes of the Pacific softly lapping the shore. Waves come rolling in in rapid succession over a bank of sand. Each wave leaves a layer of foam which never quite disappears. The coat of white, foamy water is always replaced by another as the waves break. Adding contrast to the scenes are some large rocks that project over the water. The scenes have been photographed with a delicate sense of the correct tone of light and mark the reel as an above-the-average scenic. — RAYMOND GANLY.

"Felix the Cat in Japanicky"

(Educational—One Reel)

THIS Pat Sullivan cartoon shows Felix in Japan, where he tries to spread the gospel of "chairs for comfort." The Japs are not willing to listen to his arguments but finally the cat gets the ear of the Mikado and wins him over.

This latest adventure of the cat is replete with clever little touches. Okay for your programs.—RAYMOND GANLY.

"Hidden Loot"

(Universal—Two Reels)

(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

BOB CURWOOD is the star of this western featurette of the secret service, which is neither better nor worse than those stories of the series that have gone before. In fact, one of these stories is very much like another, even to the incidental action.

In this one Bob is Don Warner of the secret service. In the woods he discovers an escaping convict and instead of capturing him forces him to exchange clothing with him. Bob does this with the thought that it will enable him to discover thte gang that has freed the convict and thereby recover the loot the gang has stolen from the D & N pay train.

The ruse works perfectly. When Don meets the gang he convinces them that he was successful in the jail break but that the real convict had been apprehended. They proceed to the Sanger ranch, the ranch of the girl with whom Bob is in love, and there he winks to convince her that he is not really one of the gang. Amy is made a prisoner in an upstairs room, and Bob, working a ruse, joins her there, to learn that she discovered the hiding place of the loot and has it with her.

After the desperate encounter with the gang, Bob and the girl make their getaway, with the desperadoes chasing them right into the hands of the sheriff and a posse, where all are captured.

"Kitchen Talent"

(Educational—Two Reels)

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

ONE of the goofiest comedians in Educational or any other brand of comedy is Geo. Davis, the former English clown. In the first place, George is possessed of an excellent pan for the projection of moronic outbursts. In the second place, he also has some ability in pantomime and gets a laugh with his gangling frame.

But they have surrounded him with those typical old-fashioned comedy gags in "Kitchen Talent." The things he is called on to do consist mainly of throwing various eatables, ducking chinaware, slapping, running and mussing up things in general This stuff has proven laughable, of course, and that undoubtedly is the reason why you see it in practically every comedy. There's no originality apparent in a man throwing a pan of dough or the chap on the receiving end taking the oozing mass in his face. Davis can perform much better, in our opinion. His antics and all the goings-on in this comedy are not to be extolled, but they are pleasing—to some.

"When George Hops"

(Universal—Two Reels)

(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

SID SAYLOR is rapidly coming to the front as a purveyor of slapstick and rough and tumble comedy. Given good material on which to work he has a happy faculty of putting his stuff over in a most satisfactory manner and he has plenty of stuff to put over in this one. In fact, there is too much of it. It is packed too full of gags and knockabout comedy, but it will doubtless be good for many laughs in the neighborhood houses.

George, on his way home from college, meets a girl on the train. He gets a job in a hotel as a bellhop and eventually it is disclosed that the hotel is run by the girl's father. Of course George balls things up generally in the new job and frequently lands in the room of the girl, where he is as frequently discovered by her father. He gets out of a number of difficulties by some quick thinking and good gags. Eventually the thing breaks out into a general melee when George is ordered to exercise a string of dogs belonging to one of the female guests. The dogs break loose and run in all directions, to the general consternation of the hotel guests.

The Law's Lash

In Which a Dog Makes Good

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

THOUGH he is one of the newer screen hounds, Klondike, F. J. McConnell's bow-wow, is coming along fine. For one thing, they provide him with good vehicles, as witness this one in which many conventional things happen, but which carries a realistic note because of competent direction and acting. They do not demand of the dog that he do impossible feats, only that he be himself, which suffices.

This story concerns the mounted police of Canada. The exploits of these protectors of law and order in the Dominion have provided motivation for many a picture, and probably will for a long time to come. One of the mounties is murdered and the dog is the only witness. His fellow mounties swear vengeance, and one of them retires from the force and goes to the dogs to give the crooks the impression that in him they will have a willing confidant. One of the villains falls for the ruse and brings the cop to the cabin where the murder occurred. It is there that the expose comes. It is revealed that in the cabin have been cached a quantity of furs, and that the mountie had been slain by the guardian of the girl, a supposedly respectable person who, in reality, thrived on villainy and conniving against the law.

The dog plays an important part in the revelation. He is presented as the faithful friend of the mounties and the mortal enemy of the villainous gang. Klondike is quite good, so are the humans in the cast. Good story value, and, what is more important, good direction, raised this one above the usual vehicles in which police dogs are heroes.

Drawing Power: Fair. The dog is not established yet. Exploitation Angles: The press book will give you all the information you may want.

THEME: Action drama in which a mountie is murdered by fur thieves. His dog witnessed his passing, and is instrumental in putting the other mounties on the right track.

Produced by F. J. McConnell. Distributed by Pathe. Released, April 22, 1928 (tentative). Length, 4,902 feet. The Cast: Robert Ellis, Mary Maberry, Jack Marsh, Richard R. Neill, LeRoy Mason, William Walters, Klondike (dog). Story by Geo. W. Pyper. Adaptor, Edward Meagher. Director, Noel Mason Smith.

Square Crooks

Plenty of Suspense and Comedy

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

ENTERTAINING, clever direction, good acting, a story in which suspense and comedy nicely intermingle, "Square Crooks" should provide the fans with a pleasant 60 minutes or so. There's a lot of human appeal salted in its scenes. They give it a brightness and snap which is all the more potential because gun play and all the rest is reduced to a fraction. It is really a comedy, one which has surprises.

Johnny Mack Brown and Robert Armstrong supply the masculine flavor, Dorothy Dwan and Dorothy Appleby the feminine. The two boys are ex-crooks who have been hitting the "straight and narrow" for about five years. Their happiness is threatened by a "gum shoe" bent on sending them back to prison. He tells their boss of their past records, and that worthy upon learning the truth fires them. On the following day they are accused of stealing a necklace belonging to the above mentioned boss.

This sequence dealing with the necklace and the efforts of the detective to find it is stretched out, it is true. It forms the best portion of the picture, but so well has the suspense and comedy been stocked that it does not tire. Do you remember those suspenseful moments in "The Unholy Three," in which Matthew Betz as the detective fondles the toy elephant containing the jewels? There are several scenes in "Square Crooks" which similarly put you on the qui vive. There are good performances from the cast.

Drawing Power: A pleasing attraction for most any house. Its players are not well known, and this fact may work against its pull to some extent. Exploitation Angles: The press book offers several interesting suggestions.

THEME: Comedy drama of the efforts of two crooks to go straight. A detective on their trail worries them for a time, but in the end everything is straightened out.

Produced and distributed by Fox Films. Released, March, 1928. Length, five reels. The Cast: Robert Armstrong, Johnny Mack Brown, Dorothy Dwan, Dorothy Appleby, Jackie Combs, Clarence Burton, Eddie Sturgis, Lydia Dickson. Adapted by Becky Gardiner from the play by Jas. T. Judge. Director, Lew Seiler.

The Avenging Shadow

Klondike Scores Again

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

KLONDIKE, F. J. McConnell's doughty police dog, has another melodramatic yarn. This is his third good story in a row, and if they continue to provide him with consistently good vehicles it will only be a matter of time before he will be at the head of the kennel of police dog stars.

The dog's master, Ray Hallor, is sent to the penitentiary, having been convicted on a charge of theft. The guilty parties are the head trusty of the pen and one of the bank clerks, but they are wily birds who know well how to keep under cover. The scenes of the convicts at their rock piles are well presented. It appears that more than the ordinary amount of effort went into the story, its continuity, direction and general production. They've so shaped the yarn that it clicks all the way.

The story has a wild automobile ride for its climax. The dog shows a surprisingly capacious bag of tricks and looks forlorn, threatening, happy as the circumstances demand.

Drawing Power: For lovers of melodrama. Suitable for the second-run and average houses. Exploitation Angles: Exploit Klondike as a new dog star. Show stills of the penitentiary scenes. Get the children's attention.

THEME: Melodrama. A young bank messenger is sentenced to the pen on a charge of stealing a payroll. Through the efforts of his dog he reveals the real thieves.

Produced by Fred J. McConnell. Distributed by Pathe. Released, April 21, 1928. Length, 4,293 feet. The Cast: Ray Hallor, Wilbur Mack, Margaret Morris, Clark Comstock, Howard Davies, LeRoy Mason and Klondike (dog). Story by Bennett Cohen. Director, Ray Taylor.

The Last Moment

An Artistic Production

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

WITH this picture Paul Fejos steps into the charmed circle of artistic directors. As an exponent of motion picture craft he rivals Murnau and his production, for sheer technical excellence and masterful handling of psychological details, can be placed alongside of the German master's "Last Laugh." Like the latter, the story is told with the use of but one title. It is all pure, unadulterated cinema, a well planned and executed job if there ever was one.

Imagine the task with which Fejos was confronted when he set out to make his film. His theme is the mind of a drowning man. It is an assumption that a person in that state sees his whole life, or the most memorable portions of it, revealed in lightning-like flashes. From the moment the first scene is disclosed (that of a suicide as he sinks beneath the water) the story flows along smoothly, wonderfully clear and precise. To say that it drips with imaginative touches would be putting it mildly. These flash-backs into the life of a man—an unhappy man—are the work of a forceful screen personality.

The camera work is also excellent in its intricate design, dissolves, flash backs, etc. From the photographic angle alone, the picture is of first rate importance. Both the director and his cameraman, Leon Shamroy, worked extraordinarily well together. The acting is good.

Perhaps the hardest thing in the world is to catch thoughts and crystalize them. Certainly authors struggle to give voice to them. The thoughts that careen through a man's mind, fugitive thoughts that so quickly fly away, are difficult, to say the least, to capture and express in terms of motion pictures. When you consider how well Fejos has done this you must conclude that he is an important new voice in the cinema.

Drawing Power: Any intelligent audience should find this picture illuminating. It does not move the heartstrings like "The Last Laugh" but it is an artistic production, attempting something new, and a good audience will appreciate that. Exploitation Angles: Its theme is something hitherto unattempted in the movies. Be sure to bring out that fact. Promise them something "different."

THEME: The past of a suicide.

Produced independently by Samuel Freedman and Edward M. Spitz. Distributed by Zakoro Film Corp. Released at the present time. Length, 5,800 feet. The Cast: Otto Matiesen, Julius Molnar, Jr., Lucille La Verne, Georgia Hale, Isabelle Lamore, Vivian Winston, Anielka Elter. Story an original by Fejos, who directed.

"Scaling the Alps"

(Fables-Cartoon—One Reel)

AL FALFA and his friends are having a great time scaling the different peaks of the Alps until a lot of outsiders butt in. These outsiders are goats that butt them from peak to peak. Continuing their exploits, Al is lowered over a peak in search of valuabde eggs and is attacked by an eagle, who gives Al all the worst of it. A volcano becoming active adds to the perils of the mountain climbers, and finally the flowing lava sends them scurry to a place of safety. There is a lot of good comedy in this one, which is well above the average.—CHESTER J. SMITH.

Regional News from Correspondents

Atlanta

THE Empire Theatre, newest of the suburban houses in Atlanta, opened its doors informally Monday afternoon, March 19, to an enthusiastic capacity house.

Situated in a largely populated section of the city, the theatre is considered one of the prettiest suburban houses in the Southeast.

The theatre is operated by the Empire Operating Company and under the direct management of Alpha Fowler, a widely known and experienced showman. It was constructed by John Vickers, construction engineer of Atlanta, and follows a Spanish motif.

The house has a seating capacpromises to be one of the most popular neighborhood theatres in the city.

Z. D. Studstill came over from Andalusia, Alabama, last week on several missions in connection with his theatre enterprises. Primarily, Mr. Studstill was concerned with buying equipment for the new house he is now bringing to completion in Andalusia, where he already operates the Royal Theatre as well as another house for colored patrons. The new Andalusia house, as yet unnamed, is scheduled to open about the 15th of April. The house is designed to seat 250.

The opening of the new Andalusia house will follow closely upon the heels of another event which gave Brantley, Alabama, its first theatre. The little town of Brantley claims a population of only about 1,000, but Mr. Studstill regarded its possibilities so favorably that he built a 300-seat house there, and saw it opened most auspiciously two weeks ago.

Of cordial interest to a large circle of friends in the local film fraternity is the announcement of the marriage of Margaret Iles, formerly of the Atlanta Weekly Film Review, but more recently of New York, to Reuben A. Greene, of Milwaukee. The ceremony took place in New York City on March 13, following which the couple left for Mr. Greene's home in Milwaukee at 839 Marietta Avenue.

M. W. Smith, of the War Department, Washington, D. C., spent several days last week in Atlanta booking new product.

C. L. Peavey, Atlanta's branch manager of F B O, made a trip through South Georgia last week.

Z. Mousa, auditor out of Warner Bros.' home office, is visiting the Atlanta exchange.

H. G. Ballance, Southern division manager for Paramount, spent last Thursday visiting the company's Orleans exchange.

C. E. Daffin, of the Daffin Theatre, Tallahasee, Ala., was in Atlanta last week to take part in the Dixie Gun Shooting Match, in which he made a high score.

R. E. Martin, of the Martin Theatres, Columbus, Ga., was a recent visitor to film row.

Mrs. Edith Perdue joined First National's personnel this week, succeeding Miss Lucy White, resigned.

J. W. Mangham, Jr., manager of Liberty's Atlanta office, made a trip to Tennessee last week.

Business in the Birmingham district, at present, is below standard of last year's trade. Various reasons are assigned for this. First, the opening of uptown theatres, has had its effect upon already established houses; second, the steel and iron manufacturies have not been running as regularly as of yore, although there is a steady picking up in this line. Also, it is manifest that Birmingham people are becoming increasingly hard to sell on amusement. They shop about quite a bit, for what they want.

It is stated that Tony Sudekum will build a new theatre in Gadsden, Ala. From another source, it is reported that Will B. Wood will also build a new theatre in Gadsden. It is also said that Mr. Sudekum is dickering for a theatre site, in Talledega, Ala.

New York & New Jersey

ALONG looked for let up on construction of new theatres in the Metropolitan district seems to have at last arrived and comment in general on this matter seems to be one of intense satisfaction, interspersed with remarks that the brakes should have been put on at least a year ago. At any rate, according to reports from several salesmen covering different zones in this section, theatre building has let down to one quarter of what it was a year ago.

There may be a few exceptions to the above rule—for instance, certain sections of Brooklyn, such as the downtown shopping district where competition will shortly bring about a matter of some twenty thousand seats, all within a few blocks. This sounds like plenty for one Brooklyn district and it may be that some one will get in a jam before it's all over. On the whole, however, Brooklyn is said to have made an appreciable gain in theatres during the last few years, today having a larger number than any of the boroughs. This has been a natural growth, apparently keeping in pace with the large increase in population.

Strange things sometimes happen to those engaged in the various branches of this business:

Last Sunday morning around 6 A. M., when most everyone connected with the film industry is taking a snooze, except those boys engaged in delivering their early morning pick-up of film to exchanges, a stranger attempted to engage a Prudential Film Distributing driver in an altercation in front of the Fox exchange on 44th Street, New York City. He later followed Frank Bernie, the driver, to the curb in front of the Paramount exchange a little further up the street and, while Bernie was busily engaged with the task of pushing a film laden truck through the doors of the building, jumped into the driver's seat and sped away with a truck load consisting of about forty pieces of celluloid drama.

Bernie turned in the alarm at the 47th street police station and assisted by other members of the film attempted to trail the truck kidnapper. The latter was finally apprehended by some of the police force in the neighborhood of 67th Street and was later released under a bail of $10,000 with a hearing set for Friday, March 30th. Four to five pieces of film were missing, due to the tail board of the truck jarring open.

At the present time no real motive can be attached to the man's actions in attempting to abscond with the truck. It is said that he appeared to be under the influence of intoxicants.

The Elton theatre, a house long disposed to having its ups and downs in the Boro Park section of Brooklyn, is again reported closed following the termination of a program of English and Jewish vaudeville inaugurated by Messrs. Linder and Thomeshefsky. It is said that showings will be discontinued at this house for a period of two weeks pending certain adjustments and that at the present time there are no definite plans for a reopening.

Coleman Bros. have reopened their Webster theatre, 167th Street and Webster Avenue, New York City.

Eddie Smith, for some time booker for Seider and Moley's picture theatre presentations, has resigned his position to become associated with Schmukler's State theatre, a new house at Ozone Park. Macnabb, manager of the Shubert-Teck Theatre, to succeed him, and of Leonard B. Sang to take Macnabb's place, all came within a few days of each other last week.

Mr. Lighton, shortly after his retirement became public, left for a brief visit in his home town, Syracuse, following which he planned to go to New Hampshire in an effort to regain his health.

Leonard E. Bergmann, general manager for A. L. Erlanger, came to Buffalo when Lighton's retirement was announced, and made arrangements for the transfer of Macnabb from the Shubert-Teck to the Erlanger. Macnabb became the Shubert-Teck manager last October when Joseph B. Maxwell resigned the position to enter the motion picture field in New York City.

Leonard B. Sang, treasurer of the Shubert-Teck, was named manager to succeed Macnabb. He started his career as an usher in Shea's Hippodrome here.

No better testimony of the abiding faith that this city's theatregoers have in the venerable "Mike" Shea, for many years in the theatrical game hereabouts, could be offered than the hearty response that was given to his invitation to the public to take a chance on last week's bill at Shea's Buffalo Theatre.

Burns who has returned to New York City.

He told a sad tale of his experimentation recently with a sound recording device, in California, into which he sunk quite a wad of dough. But he isn't weeping for the money he lost. "It costs money to learn, and I sure had an expensive lesson," he said ruefully. Brink made the journey in his Willys-Knight with the big spotlight—he put a spotlight on that makes a locomotive spotlight look as small as a bead, almost, and gets quite a kick out of it. So do his friends.

San Francisco

WHEN the Publix stage acts arrived at the Granada on March 16th, the East as represented by New York, and the West by San Francisco and Los Angeles, were in direct competition.

Incidentally the coming of Publix acts established a theatrical rocerd for long railroad jumps—Chicago to Seattle, to Portland, to San Francisco, to Los Angeles, to Denver; good for the railroads but not too good for the balance sheet of the theatre ledger.

Milton A. Nathan, who has been identified with the San Francisco Film Board of Trade for several years, first as secretary and now as attorney, has had a camp named after him.

New England

LOEW'S Boston theatres have declared a dividend of 25 cents a share, payable May 1 to stockholders of record of April 16.

Reports of the gross of the 12-weeks' showing of "Wings" at the Tremont theatre, Boston, at a $2 top place it near the head of the list of road shows for New England. In its final week it grossed $16,000. Because of the figures, it may be that a return of the film to Boston later in the season can be arranged.

District Manager Harry F. Campbell was remembered on his 50th birthday on Tuesday with several huge bouquets, the gift of members of the Fox exchange at Boston, where Mr. Campbell maintains his headquarters. Letters, cards and telegrams were received in profusion. Members of his sales staff presented him with an eight-piece platinum stud set.

"A showman in every sense of the word" is the fitting description of Louis Levine, newy appointed manager of Loew's Columbia theatre, Boston.

Mr. Levine assumes his duties with a wealth of theatrical knowledge gained through nearly twenty years of direct association with the theatre and its allied branches.

It was back in 1910 that Mr. Levine first became associated with the amusement game. In the early days of the motion pictures, Mr. Levine toured the "one nighters" throughout the fertile field of New England.

His next move brought him to New York City, where he became associated with the Fred Mardo Vaudeville Agency, in whose employ he remained for more than five years.

From Fred Mardo's he went to Arthur J. Horwitz as an artists representative. Several years later he returned to Boston, his home town, and joined the advertising staff of the Atlantic Printing Co. This engagement was followed by a journey into the office of Horwitz & Krauss, assuming the management of their Boston office, taking charge of the bookings of their vaudeville acts.

After the partnership of this latter firm was dissolved, Mr. Levine then joined the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Dist. Corp., taking the road tour of the "Four Horsemen" picture, later joining the Federated Film Co. and the Independent Film Co. as salesman through Maine, New Hampshire and Vermont.

Mr. Levine is essentially a product of Boston, where he was born and educated.

Projection

Optics, Electricity, Practical Ideas & Advice

Inquiries and Comments

A Problem in Long Distance Organ Playing

A CINCINNATI exhibitor presents an original problem in projection in that he wishes to show pictures in one theatre and have an organist, located in another adjacent theatre, accompany the pictures being projected in the first theatre.

As it is necessary for the organist to have some idea of the action as it takes place in the theatre where projection is being performed, the exhibitor is trying to find ways and means of showing a small reproduction of the original picture on a screen placed in front of the organist.

His letter and the diagram shown in Fig. 1, will serve to illustrate this in better fashion.

Dear Sir:

Will you please give the following your consideration if a solution is possible?

What I would like to find out is, is there an apparatus on the market by which you can pick up a picture that is being projected on a screen and throw it to a small (say eleven by fourteen) screen beside the organist?

I am enclosing a sketch which will explain what I mean. I seem to recall something of this sort being published in one of the trade journals sometime past, but have been unable to find it in any of my files.

The idea is this: in summer when we run the airdome (theatre No. 1 in the diagram) theatre No. 2 is closed. We want our organist to be able to play to the picture that is being shown in the airdrome and play from the console in the closed theatre. The organ pipes are so arranged that the sound can be directed into the airdome. We need some kind of apparatus at Point A (See Fig. 1) that will pick up the picture on screen No. 1 and reflect, or project, it to a small screen, marked B, beside the organist.

Redirection by Plane Mirrors

A number of schemes suggest themselves for this problem which, when considered from a purely theoretical standpoint, would work well enough to enable the organist to see a recognizable likeness of the original picture, even though the quality of projection would be far below that shown on Screen No. 1.

In the first place, a simple redirection of the light from Screen No. 1 to the organist is possible through the use of plane mirrors. To do this one mirror would have to be placed at Point A (See Fig. 1) and so angled to make it project onto a second plane mirror placed at Point B, in plain view of the organist. The organist, then, could look into the mirror at B and in it see a reflection of the screen image in the mirror at Point A.

Optically, this method would seem to be all right, since the organist would see an image of Screen No. 1 as if he were looking directly at the screen from a point located at a distance equal to the sum of the two distances between Screen No. 1 and Point A, and Point A and Point B.

The image would be small, it is true, but the practical objection to this method would be the size of the plane mirror at Point A. In order for the organist to see a complete reflection of Screen No. 1, the mirror at Point A would have to be greater than half the size of the picture on Screen No. 1, assuming that the sketch is drawn to scale. The mirror at Point A would have to be so large, therefore, that the scheme would be out of the question.

Projection by Concave Mirror

A method of projection which involves the use of a large concave mirror, such as a spherical mirror, would offer better practical conditions at some sacrifice in the quality of the image seen by the organist.

A ten inch, or even twelve inch diameter spherical mirror of long focal length (to make the mirror quite flat and so reduce reflection errors) could be placed at Point A and so angled as to make it project an image of Screen picture No. 1, onto a screen placed at Point B. Since the reflected image, however, would be larger than the organist picture, it would be well to project this to image directly onto Screen No. 1, thereby establishing more natural conditions for the organist in theatre No. 2.

The quality of projection would be rather poor, since distortion would result from the screen picture being considerably off to one side of the axis of the spherical mirror. However, the picture should be good enough to enable the organist to follow the action.

Probably the chief advantage of this method, aside from its simplicity, lies in the fact that the projecting mirror can easily be of such a large size as to intercept quite a bit of light and so give a much brighter image than could be otherwise obtained. Some improvement in the optical quality of the projected image on Screen No. 2 could probably be made by first intercepting the light from Screen No. 1 at Point A with a plane mirror and redirecting the light to the spherical mirror located close by, after which the image could be thrown to Screen No. 2. In this manner, more favorable angles could be obtained which would lessen the distortion due to the picture being off center.

Lens Method of Projection

Of course, there is the standard lens method of projecting the image and obtaining the required redirection by means of a plane mirror placed either ahead of, or behind, the projection lens.

The principal objection to this method is that a suitable projection lens cannot be obtained in a size sufficient to pick up an appreciable amount of light for giving a reasonably bright image on Screen No. 2.

Under the best conditions, the picture on Screen No. 2 will not be bright enough to cause anyone to become excited over it, and the use of a small diameter projection lens certainly will not help this condition.

The fact that the distance between Screen No. 2 and Point A is appreciably greater than the distance between Screen No. 1 and Point A, also, will reduce the brightness of the Screen picture in theatre No. 2.

At any rate these three schemes seem to offer the best possibilities in the absence of a practical scheme of radio movies. The method employing the large diameter spherical mirror, we would say, offers best chances of success with the least amount of trouble, and we should give this a fair trial before looking around for more complicated methods of obtaining successful results.

Tebbett's Oriental Theatre One of Country's Finest

WALTER TEBBETTS recently opened the doors of his beautiful and artistic Oriental theatre, located at East Grand Avenue and Morrison Streets, representing a total investment of over $500,000. It has a seating capacity of 2,500 and is considered as one of the finest atmospheric houses in the country.

The theatre is of the East Indian style of architecture, with the exterior of the playhouse harmonizing with the interior in decorations, equipment and furnishings. A feature of the house is the luxurious and artistic balcony foyer, which is considered the last word in theatre comfort.

A Wurlitzer four-manual organ, costing around $50,000, is another feature, while still another boast of the house is an elevating orchestra pit, which is lowered and raised by a hydraulic shaft. It is the only orchestra pit now in use in any Northwest theatre. Robert Berg, interior decorator, with the National Theatre Supply Company, supervised the artistic decorations which adorn the walls and roof of the theatre, while the complete job of drapes, seats, equipment was handled by the National Theatre Supply Company.

Josef Srodka, formerly director of the symphony orchestra at the UFA house in Berlin, Germany, will wield the baton at this house, while Glenn Shelley, formerly featured organist at the Liberty, is top organist at the new house. Walter Tebbetts, owner, will also manage the house, while Hubert Groves will be in charge of publicity.

The house will be the only first-run East Side house in town charging a 35-cent top, with matinees a quarter. Pictures will play the house a full week. Tebbetts is not connected with any theatre organization or circuit, he being the sole operator of the theatre.

Site Bought for Theatre at Sheffield, Ala.

Sheffield, Ala., is soon to have a fine new theatre, as the Muscle Shoals Theatres, Inc., through its resident manager, Louis Rosenbaum, has purchased two lots on Montgomery Avenue, between the Sheffield National Bank and the Alabama Power Company, from the Sheffield Development Company.

It is authoritatively stated that the total investment, when the theatre is completed, will be $100,000 and that the theatre will be modern in every respect, with facilities for stage productions as well as motion pictures.

Newspaper Opinions on New Pictures

"A Texas Steer"—First National, Madison Theatre, Detroit

Evening Times: "Rough and tumble fare with a steady succession of laughs. It is never dull. Louise Fazenda is a fine running mate for Rogers, and appears to better advantage than she has for a long time back. Rogers has a flock of wise-cracking subtitles, which keep the audience in a high state of glee."

Free Press: "Rogers brimming with horse-sense humor and good for a laugh any time. He will probably add oodles of fame and shekels to the considerable pile of both which he now possesses. No one could resist Will's good nature, his wise cracking, his gum chewing and his cowboy ways. There are a lot of laughs in the picture, some pretty good views of Washington, and always there is the inimitable and likeable Rogers."

Detroit News: "Broad comedy which develops a number of funny situations. Rogers . . . funny without doing a thing. He contributes some subtitles that contribute no small part in speeding up the fun. Louise Fazenda can always be depended on for a good account of herself."

"Her Wild Oat"—First National, Circle Theatre, Indianapolis

News: "Miss Moore has the able direction of Neilan and the support of a highly personable cast. The film is, therefore, most pleasant to the eye. Miss Moore makes Mary Lou Smith amusing and sometimes pathetic. The comedy is slight but pleasant and amusing. Miss Moore is as diverting as ever. The denouement is unusual and amusing."

Times: "The whole thing is a riot . . . a dish for a king—that's what Miss Moore serves you. Mary Lou Smith is made a very live and real girl by the acting of Miss Moore. To get across her Ritzie stuff she must burlesque her work, which, however, does not detract, but rather adds a bit. The film is full of comedy situations, all well handled. The story is handled with a master's touch. Good comedy farce."

Star: "Colleen Moore is Cinderella again. She gives full play to her 'cuteness' in 'Her Wild Oat, a romance of working girls and noblemen."

"The Private Life of Helen of Troy"—First National, Strand Providence, R. I.

Journal and Bulletin: "Brilliant film satire with brilliant cast. Most unusual picture turned out in many a day. Comedy in generous quantities, satirical, sly, subtle, broad, humorous, whimsical and daring by turns. Richly costumed, sets breath-taking in their magnitude and striking in originality."

News: "Brilliant. Fun galore in this picturization of the story of first flapper queen, and it is presented against formal, dignified and beautiful backgrounds of ancient Troy and Sparta."

"The Circus" — United Artists, Cincinnati

Post: "'Circus' Makes Many of the Great Talk in Admiration. When Charlie Chaplin film's in town, it is a signal for all highbrows to brow a little higher and for all lowbrows to glory in their lowliness. 'The Circus' is no mean product."

Post: "Charlie Chaplin smacks you hard with his 'The Circus.' Is immensely amusing. He executes his tricks swiftly and dexterously; and he always is exactly like some human being you know. It took Chaplin a long time to make 'The Circus.' The film shows it. It is a nicely finished spectacle of glorious foolishness."

"Mother Machree"—Fox Films, Globe Theatre, New York City

Times: "Excellent screen entertainment. A sympathetic blending of gentle humor and restrained sentiment . . . of strong appeal . . . Beautifully staged and capitally photographed, Belle Bennett acts with earnest, motherly conception of her part. McLaglen introduces moments of humor and sadness."

Daily News: "Tugs heart strings. . . . One of those pictures which call for your 'kerchief frequently and freely."

American: "One of most entertaining films of new year. Has its mischievous moments and its despairing ones."

Herald-Tribune: "Will bring joy in the lives of multitudes for whom it was designed. 'Kind hearts are more than coronets and simple faith than Norman blood' . . . this is teaching of 'Mother Machree'."

Morning World: "I doubt if there can be found in all Hollywood's broad expanse an author who now will be capable of providing this lorn and sorrowing parent (Belle Bennett) a story capable of carrying her into depths of more poignant anguish."

Telegram: "Miss Bennett gives her usual competent performance."

"Sadie Thompson" — United Artists Theatre, Los Angeles

Times: "Swanson Film is Brilliant. 'Sadie Thompson' Proves to be Great Drama. Hailed as Glowingly Human. 'Sadie Thompson' which opened yesterday morning at the United Artists Theatre, with huge crowds battling away at the doors—more probably in order to see their Gloria Swanson than to see Sadie—as early as half-past ten, is one of the finest, most glowingly human pictures the screen has ever seen. The crowds may come to see Gloria, but they will remain to see Sadie. Which is intended as an even greater compliment to Gloria. What a triumph for Gloria Swanson! No mood seems beyond her, whether of gaiety or deeply mocking mischief, sweep of sorrow, or storm of anger, or flow of tenderness. The picture holds you from moment to moment with its swiftly, smoothly mounting moods and its pictorial beauty."

Record: "'Sadie Thompson' Gloria's Best Film. U. A. Picture Ranks At Top. 'Sadie Thompson' one of the best pictures ever filmed. It is Gloria Swanson's picture and the 'Sadie Thompson' she has created for the screen will live long in the memory. It is her finest role. She does more acting than in any of her other pictures."

Examiner: "'Sadie" Hailed as Triumph of Photoplay Art. 'Sadie Thompson' is easily the most momentous film occasion in Gloria Swanson's life. One of screenland's most popular dramatic actresses. Miss Swanson hasn't given such a performance in years. She loses her self in the gamin qualities of the slangy Sadie. 'Sadie Thompson' is excellent entertainment and I subscribe most heartily to its merits and to those of Gloria Swanson, whose characterization is superbly sound and fine."

Herald: "'Sadie Thompson' is a fine picture. The best, in fact, that Gloria Swanson has made in years. Gloria Excels."

News: "Gloria Swanson's work is superb. A Swanson with depth and fire in tawdry finery and impossible hats."

"The Devil Dancer" — United Artists, Rivoli Theatre, New York City

World: "She is one of the finest dramatic actresses on screen. Gilda Gray the authentic, impressive, important player of serious parts. I do not know of an actress in recent years who has been so reminiscent of Lillian Gish at Miss Gish's best. She is extraordinary, beautiful. All other little ten-penny sex-appealers of Hollywood when placed alongside of her make me laugh."

Graphic: Gilda Gray's best film. Worth seeing. Never has Miss Gray photographed so beautifully. Puts into her dramatic efforts same individual touch she gives to her dancing. Sets striking and original. Becomes a thing of unusual merit with Miss Gray starring in it."

News: "Fine performances. Deserves to attract. Has been capably and understandingly handled by Niblo. Photographically, production is weird, interestingly so; histrionically it is impressive and earnest. A natural rhythm in Gilda Gray's every movement. And Gilda is an actress. She has rare charm. Her lovely limbs, her slanting eyes of green, Slavic contour of her face make cameras glad. So far above her previous vehicle that no comparison can be made."

Journal: "Unusually impressive settings. Beautiful photography and backgrounds."

Sun: "When she dances, she is something to be admired. Picturesque and stunning backgrounds represent a feat in craftsmanship. Thoroughly fascinating in her two dances. Of equal interest are sets, lighting, grouping, thrilling pageantry. Effects as picturesque as movies have ever acquired."

Herald-Tribune: "Picturesque backgrounds. Competent acting. Admirable sets. Miss Gray's work excellent."

Telegraph: "The best value, not alone on Broadway—but throughout length and breadth of America. A bang-up photoplay with plenty of burning love and smashing thrills. Star's work far eclipses anything she has yet accomplished in her sensationally successful career. Production may be likened to a pyramid of jewels, each more radiant than the other, with blinding brilliance of star shining from apex. More thrillingly beautiful than ever before. Superbly photographed, her sensitive, expressive countenance wins instant love and sympathy of audience. The best show in town. This is one you mustn't miss."

Times: "Production wonderfully convincing in atmosphere and rich in scenery. Quite different from ordinary run of films. Holds attention and Miss Gray is always interesting, whether whirling around in one of long skirts or standing quietly. Has a charm of her own, and nobody can accuse her of being blasé in love scenes."

Eve. World: "Miss Gray portrays her role with full force of her temperament. Setting gorgeous. Unusual in its appeal. Miss Gray superb in dances. One comes away feeling one has been entertained.

Telegram: "Has some of the most magnificent and atmospheric scenes of recent memory. Gilda more ravishing than ever. Photography skilled and Oriental settings startling in austere beauty."

American: "Enthusiastic audience greeted star's production, which seemed to prove beyond doubt that picture had 'gotten over.' Highly melodramatic and full of thrills.
